FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE—

U. S. Marine Corps,
Department of the Pacific
BY MAJ. GEN. A. H. NOBLE
Commanding General

ESTABLISHED in 1920 by order of the then Secretary of the Navy, the late Josephus Daniels, the Department of the Pacific exercises administrative control over posts, stations, depots, detachments, offices, and other organizations of Marine Corps in the Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth and Seventeenth Naval Districts; which include Alaska and an area bounded on the north by Canada, on the south by Mexico, on the west by the Pacific Ocean, and on the east by the approximate line of the Rocky Mountains. Administrative control is further exercised over Marine detachments aboard ships of the U. S. Navy in the Pacific. Excluded from control of the Department are Fleet Marine Force units, Marine Corps Air Stations, reserve and recruiting activities.

Maj. Gen. Noble

The Commanding General, Department of the Pacific, is directly subordinate to the Commandant of the Marine Corps in the military command relationship. In addition, he acts as staff advisor to the Commander Western Sea Frontier, and, in an emergency, exercises certain military command functions under that activity.

With departmental headquarters located at 100 Harrison Street, San Francisco, Calif., Marine Corps activities of the Department of the Pacific fall under three general categories:

(1) Marine Corps Supporting Forces whose mission is to support the activities of the Marine Corps as a whole on the West Coast and in the Pacific Ocean areas. The Commanding General, Department of the Pacific, exercises military command over such forces, with the exception of management control which is reserved by the Commandant of the Marine Corps. These Supporting Forces, each under the command of a general officer, are:

a. Marine Corps Recruit Depot, San Diego, Calif. This Depot is assigned the primary mission of recruit training. Approximately one-half of all Marine Corps recruits receive their basic training at San Diego.

b. Camp Joseph H. Pendleton, Ocean-side, Calif. This Camp serves as a home station and as an area for advanced training for Fleet Marine Force, Pacific, units. The site was purchased at the be-

Conferees Agree on 4% Increase in Base Pay, 14% in Allowances; Combat Pay Out

The Senate and House are expected to vote next week on a military pay raise bill which will boost base pay by 4 per cent and add 14 per cent to current quarters and subsistence allowances.

If the measure is adopted by the end of the month—now believed certain—the pay raise would become effective as of 1 May.

Compromises reached by a Senate-House Conference Committee on Thursday, 8 May, paved the way for the final pay action.

As agreed upon by the conferees, the measure applies to personnel of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Public Health Service, and the Maritime Service.

The House conferees accepted the Senate amendment restoring credit for Academy service to those graduated from the U. S. Naval Academy prior to 1913.

The conferees knocked out from the pay bill the $45 monthly combat pay proviso in the Senate version of the legislation. This action was taken when House conferees explained that no hearings on this matter have been held by

Senate Version Adopted

The JOURNAL on 26 April reported exclusively that the Senate-House conferees were debating two alternatives. The Senators wanted a 4 per cent increase in base pay, a 14 per cent boost in allowances. The Representatives wanted a "5-and-10" increase. The Senators won, but not before giving up the $45 a month combat pay proviso.

the House Armed Services Committee.

However, the House conferees, one of whom was Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga.) of the Armed Services Committee, promised that hearings will be held on the combat pay legislation which has been pending before Congress since January 1951.

The forthcoming vote on the cost-of-living pay increase for men and women in uniform will come more than seven months after the Department of Defense asked Congress to boost military pay by 10 per cent on base pay and allowances to cover higher living costs.

The Pentagon bill also asked a 1 July (Please turn to Page 1121)

President To Speak at USMA

Maj. Gen. Frederick A. Irving, USA, Superintendent of the U. S. Military Academy, has announced the guest list for the West Point Sesquicentennial Jubilee Convocation on 20 May at which President Harry S. Truman will speak.

Other speakers at the convocation will be Dr. Karl T. Compton, of the National Security Training Commission, and General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The Jubilee Convocation is the final major ceremony planned for the observance of the 150th anniversary of the Military Academy.

The Jubilee will be attended by more than 1,000 invited guests including heads of universities, learned societies, libraries, and military academies; distinguished members of U. S. Government agencies, senior officers of the Armed Forces, and representatives of foreign governments.

More than 250 American colleges and universities will be represented in the various activities of the day, which will include an academic procession, the convocation exercises, and a parade and retreat review by the United States Corps of Cadets in honor of the President. Acceptances have been received from more than 45 foreign colleges and universities and from 20 foreign military academies.

Among the foreign diplomats who have accepted invitations are: Ambassador Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne of (Please turn to Page 1100)

Ban on Retirements

The original advocate of the current restriction on the retirement of Career Officers now expresses the belief that the purpose of the fiscal year '52 appropriations amendment has been served and that he is no longer as enthusiastic for the limitation as was the case a year ago.

Representative James E. Van Zandt (R-Pa.), a member of the Armed Services Committee and a Captain in the Naval Reserve, told THE JOURNAL this week that the amendment has prevented the early retirement of high-ranking officers, which, he said, was its main purpose.

The fiscal year 1953 appropriations bill, as passed by the House, continues the ban on voluntary retirements below the statutory age unless specific approval is given by the Secretary of Defense on the basis of "hardship" or "good of the Service."

The Pentagon is expected to ask the Senate to permit voluntary retirements upon completion of 30 years' service. However, there are reports that the recent necessity of extending enlistments will be cited as a reason for continuing the restriction on retirements of Regular officers.

Congressman Van Zandt says he would not express opposition if the Senate were to knock out the House rider, but it appears certain that the rider will be retained in some form. The odds are good that the Senate will O.K. the House action, although there is a possibility of the 30-year modification.

Gen. Bradley Tells Peril of Funds Cut

The Joint Chiefs of Staff have advised the Secretary of Defense that the general period of 1954 will be the most dangerous for the security of the United States within the foreseeable future.

This was the forthright statement made this week by General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, JCS Chairman, in testimony before the Senate Appropriations Committee.

General Bradley went to Capitol Hill, with other civilian and military leaders of the Armed Forces, to warn of the peril in the House action which would limit defense spending during fiscal year 1953 to $46 billion.

The Department of Defense has planned $52 billion in expenditures in the period from 1 July 1952 to 1 July 1953.

To the extent that military security permitted, General Bradley gave to the Congress and to the Nation a comprehensive analysis of why the Joint Chiefs are so fearful of the threatened "knock-out" of vital defense production, already subjected to a "stretch-out."

While emphasizing the difficulties of predicting the course of action of a "shifty adversary," General Bradley said, however, that it was the considered judgment of the JCS that "if the present trend of Soviet activities continues, the military considerations which today deter our enemies from war may have lost their deterring effect by the 1954 period.

"Our enemies will have capabilities of endangering our country—doing it most critical damage—at that time," General Bradley declared.

"As long as the United States and her allies are in a weaker military position than the Soviet Union and her satellites," he said, "the danger to our security exists."

He then gave the following explanation of why in a period sometime after mid-1953, all of 1954 and for the first part of 1955 will be one of "greatest danger."

1. Russia's Growing Atomic Capability

"In the late summer of 1949, the President announced the Soviet Union's first atomic explosion. If you would like a relative timetable, consider our own atomic capabilities between 1945, when we held the first test explosion in the New Mexico desert, and five years later, 1950.

"When you consider that the Russians gained considerable research knowledge from German experiments, and German scientists, and add to this the knowledge she gained from the Fuchs betrayal, you can see that the Soviet Union atomic progress, with all the knowledge that she has gained by these methods, should be faster than our own progress in our first five year period. I have cited this only as an example of what we might expect.

2. The Growing Strength of the West Points to '54

"It has become common international knowledge that our plans for the defense of the North Atlantic community have had 1954 as their target for minimum needed readiness.

Land and Carrier Planes Bomb Enemy's Big Supply Base; Navy Shells Red Guns

Saturation bombing attacks on a huge enemy supply center and communication networks by Allied land and carrier-based planes characterized military operations in Korea this week. The lull in the land fighting continued, broken only by an Allied tank-led local attack in Central Korea and by light engagements between small groups on various parts of the front.

Allied naval surface vessels attacked enemy gun positions, supply areas, and troop concentrations on both coasts of North Korea, and maintained a tight blockade of all enemy-held Korean ports. Red shore fire of increased volume and intensity was encountered by Allied warships, indicating a continuing buildup of enemy coastal artillery.

In the heaviest air raid of the war Allied planes practically wiped out a huge Red supply base at Suan, about 25 miles northeast of Pyongyang, the North Korean capital. The raid continued all day Thursday, 8 May, and more than 300 sorties were flown by the fighters and fighter-bombers engaged in the attack. Bombs, rockets, napalm, and machine-gun fire were loosed against the large storage area. Preliminary reports indicated that 165 buildings were destroyed and 81 damaged. In addition numerous vehicles and revetments were knocked out. By nightfall uncontrolled flames were sweeping the area and the town of Suan.

Enemy MIG-15s flew far south of their Manchurian sanctuary in a vain effort to halt the raid. American Sabre Jets and Australian Meteors, flying cover for the raiders, took on the intercepting MIGs, the Australian shooting down one enemy jet, and the Sabres destroying one and damaging another.

There were relatively few other air combats during the week, following some sharp battles over the weekend. Late last Saturday afternoon, 3 May, American F-86 Sabre Jets shot down five enemy MIGs and damaged one LA-15. On the following day, Sunday, 4 May, the Sabres destroyed four Red jets and damaged another, for a weekend total of nine enemy planes destroyed and two damaged.

Heavy coordinated attacks were also made this week by Allied planes on important stretches of enemy rail lines. Tracks were cut in hundreds of places and marshalling yards were transformed into tangled masses of wreckage.

Late this week Communist prisoners in a stockade on Koje Island, off the southern coast of Korea, seized Brig. Gen. Francis T. Dodd, USA, the commandant, and held him as a hostage. The prisoners grabbed Gen. Dodd and another officer, but the second officer managed to escape. A note in Gen. Dodd's handwriting reported that he was unhurt. In previous riots at this camp unruly prisoners were killed before the disturbances were put down.

Ration Ammunition

In Washington General J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, told a Congressional committee that it had become necessary to ration some important types of ammunition in Korea because production still does not equal normal battle expenditures, and World War II stocks of these items have been exhausted or are approaching depletion. In Korea it was confirmed that there had been ammunition rationing to conserve reserve stocks, but it was stated that the present supply is adequate to meet the current tactical situation. The normal rate of battle expenditures of ammunition referred to by General Collins is apparently that which may be expected under combat conditions considerably more active than those prevailing during the present lull in ground fighting in Korea. However, it is quite conceivable that under full-scale operations, which might ensue if truce negotiations were broken off, ammunition shortages in Korea might become quite serious.

During this week, throughout the long land battle line, stretching across the Korean peninsula, the pattern of ground fighting continued approximately the same as for weeks past. Patrol clashes, minor probing attacks, tank raids, exchanges of mortar and artillery fire, and brief light engagements occurred frequently on all sections of the front, but for the most part the numbers involved were small, and the fighting was without appreciable significance.

Northwest of Yonchon an enemy platoon in a 10-minute firefight forced a small Allied outpost to withdraw. Immediately thereafter United Nations mortar and artillery fire was directed on the enemy, and the position was soon reoccupied by Allied troops without opposition.

Patrol Engaged

A United Nations patrol operating northeast of Panmunjom fought an enemy company for four hours, reporting that 47 Red soldiers were killed and 27 wounded in the action. An enemy unit of undetermined strength fired briefly on Allied positions west of Korangpo-ri, but ceased after a barrage of artillery fire from United Nations battery. In the same general area an Allied patrol dispersed a small enemy unit with small arms, automatic weapons, mortars and hand grenades.

It is estimated that 27 of the enemy were killed by a United Nations patrol in a 42-minute fight west of Chorwon, during which small arms, automatic weapons, and mortar and artillery fire were employed. Two enemy platoons, supported by mortar and artillery fire, made a midnight attack on a United Nations advance position east of the Pukhan River. After a lively fight for two hours the Reds withdrew. A small enemy unit made a light probing attack northeast of Kumwha, but retreated as opposition developed.

Two strong Allied tank raids were made on enemy positions on the Central front which resulted in numerous Red casualties. The attacks were made along the Kumwha-Kumsong road and were opposed by two enemy battalions, which attacked the tanks with mortar and artillery fire.

On the eastern front south of Kosong an Allied patrol engaged two enemy platoons in a half-hour fight in which several of the enemy were killed and 10 bunkers were destroyed. Several small skirmishes occurred west of the Mundung-ni Valley. Most of the clashes took place at night and were of brief duration.

Heavy attacks by Allied warships and Naval aviation during the week inflicted hundreds of casualties on the enemy, and destroyed shore batteries, rail lines, and supply centers. The United States Light Cruiser Manchester and the Destroyer Evans pounded Red installations along the northeast coast of Korea night and day throughout most of the week. The 6-inch guns of the Manchester knocked out Red 76-mm artillery positions, mortar sites, railroad shops, marshalling yards, warehouses and small buildings. The Evans concentrated its 5-inch fire on shore batteries and other gun emplacements.

Carriers Vital to Defense

Vice Admiral John F. Cassady, Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for Air, was the speaker at a luncheon given by the Aviation Writers Association Region 4 on 6 May at the Burlington Hotel, Washington, D. C.

Admiral Cassady, who is soon to leave to take command of the Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean, told the 61 AWA members and guests that the airplane carrier is a vital link in the United States' defense structure. Our carriers, he said, have aircraft capable of carrying atom bombs "up to the largest size produced any place in the world." As to their vulnerability, he stated that no electronic homing devices for guided missiles can ever be as efficient as the human-guided Kamakazies used by the Japanese and that those were unable to stop U. S. carriers in World War II. No large carriers, he declared, have ever been sunk by land-based aircraft. Furthermore, he said, the new Forrestal class carriers will have more compartmentation and under-water protection than earlier carriers and will, therefore, be more difficult to sink.

Seated at the head table with Admiral Cassady were: Admiral DeWitt C. Ramsey, USN(Ret.), president of the Aircraft Industries Association; Vice Admiral Emory S. Land, USN(Ret.), president of the Air Transport Association; Major General William O. Brice, USMC, who recently returned from Korea to take over his new post as Assistant to the Commandant of the Marine Corps for Air; Major General B. M. McFadyen, USA, Deputy to the Assistant Chief of Staff of the Army, G-1; Col. Charles Eisenhart, USAF, of the Office of Information, U. S. Air Force; James J. Haggerty, jr., national president of AWA; and LeRoy Whitman, Deputy Director AWA Region 4, who presided.

Suspend Marine Program

The Marine Corps this week indefinitely suspended its program for appointment of enlisted personnel to the rank of second lieutenant.

No reason was given for the action, and it came as a complete surprise to interested personnel who were to be considered this month. The program was initiated last January and about one thousand top staff NCO's were selected for promotion by two of three boards which were to meet under the program.

The third board was scheduled to meet during May, and preliminary work, including a screening board, had been completed before the suspension announcement was made. A memorandum issued on 5 May said only that the program is "hereby suspended," that no further recommendations are desired, and personnel who have been recommended but not yet selected "will not be considered" unless the "program should be reopened."

When the program was announced by Almar on 17 January, the Marine Commandant, General Lemuel C. Shepherd, said that the shortage of second lieutenants in the Corps "makes it imperative that all commanding officers consider at this time all eligible personnel."

The first board selected 473 warrant officers and master sergeants for appointment as second lieutenant and the following month, 26 Feb., Headquarters issued a Memorandum pointing out that "recommendations have not been forthcoming in sufficient quantity to meet Marine Corps needs." At that time, the program was changed to embrace eligible personnel of all ranks.

Last month, the second board announced the selection of 474 additional men, largely warrant officers, master sergeants and technical sergeants. At that time, Headquarters said a third board would meet in May to consider all those not selected or disqualified by the first two boards.

This week's directive, Marine Corps Memorandum Number 49-52, did not mention the pending board, but made it clear that no such board will meet unless the program is reinstituted at a later date.

Armed Forces Day

Next Saturday, 17 May, is Armed Forces Day—a day devoted to honoring the men and women in uniform and to giving the American public a general view of America's growing defense.

Parades, mass meetings, open houses at military and naval installations, luncheons, dinners, balls, and other special events are being scheduled throughout the country. Men, equipment, naval vessels and aircraft will be exhibited and demonstrated within limitations imposed by economy.

Despite these limitations, which will result in fewer aircraft, heavy tanks and other equipment appearing in local celebrations, indications are that more people will observe Armed Forces Day, both in the United States and overseas, than in any previous year.

President's Proclamation

In proclaiming the third Saturday in May as Armed Forces Day, President Harry S. Truman urged Government officials and the public to take active part in its observance. Cabinet members and other Government officials have echoed the President's plea in their statements and have pledged cooperation.

Governors of Georgia, Idaho, Maryland, Michigan, Montana, New York, and Virginia took early action by issuing proclamations and statements calling for civic participation. Other Governors and hundreds of mayors also have issued proclamations and established local committees to arrange appropriate community programs.

Scores of national organizations have endorsed Armed Forces Day and have urged their local chapters to take active part in community programs. These include not only veterans' organizations, patriotic societies, and various service groups, but also educational, industrial, labor, women's, business and professional groups.

Speakers

Armed Forces Day speakers, will be drawn principally from regional, State or local levels of Service commands, government, veterans' organizations and Reserve and retired military personnel. Relatively few speakers will come from Washington.

More than 450 Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, and Coast Guard installations have scheduled "open house" on Armed Forces Day, and some 3,000 National Guard units have planned armory shows and other activities.

Public receptions and special events will mark the day in sixty-five United States embassies and missions in foreign countries.

Local observances will be varied. In the Nation's capital, President Truman will participate at a banquet in the evening of 16 May. The following morning the annual Armed Forces Day parade will move up Constitution Avenue. This will be followed by a two-day open house at Bolling Air Force Base which will feature helicopters, flame-throwers, tanks, jet aircraft, and other attractions.

Leavenworth Anniversaries

At Fort Leavenworth, Kans., the Celebration of the 125th anniversary of that post will be combined with the observance of Armed Forces Day. At New York City more than 25,000 uniformed personnel will parade, and at Keesler Field, Alabama, more than 60,000 people will participate. At Boston, Rear Adm. Rogue A. Saldias, Secretary of Peruvian Navy will be the guest of honor. The Idaho Air National Guard will drop Armed Forces Day leaflets over Idaho communities holding celebrations. At Monterey, Calif., there will be a torchlight parade.

Armed Forces Day observance in some communities will be combined with other celebrations such as the Tulip Festival at Albany, N. Y.; "Heldorado" at Las Vegas, N. Mex.; the Cotton Carnival at Memphis, Tenn.; the homecoming welcome at Santa Fe, N. Mex., for the 726th Anti-Aircraft Artillery Battalion; the Cavalcade of Freedom at Buffalo, N. Y.; and the Civil Defense "Alert America" caravan in several other cities.

The occasion also will be noted in sermons and prayers in thousands of churches and at Portland, Ore., a huge all-denominational Armed Forces Day service will be conducted.

Pentagon Officials Present Case Against Budget Slashes Voted for '53 by House

The Pentagon campaign, begun last week, to impress upon the Senate the danger to national security from the House-approved expenditures ceiling on fiscal year '53 defense spending, was pressed vigorously this week by top spokesmen for each Service. With General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, JCS Chairman, these officials emphasized the threat to the security of the nation which would result if the House action gained Senate approval. Following are highlights from the testimony of the civilian and military leaders of the Armed Forces before the Senate Appropriations Committee.

ARMY

Imposition of a $46 billion expenditure limitation on the Armed Forces during fiscal year 1953 would prevent the Army from adequately supporting troops in Korea in the event of resumption of all-out hostilities and would mean that "until some time during fiscal '54 the safety of Army troops stationed in Europe would be jeopardized if they were attacked," said Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, jr.

Only by stripping the National Guard and the Organized Reserves, he reported, could the Army fully equip the active forces with their initial allowances of modern weapons and equipment.

Pointing to specific effects of the limitation, Secretary Pace reported that the Army would be permitted to accept only about 318 medium tanks instead of the planned 3428 during the coming fiscal year, only 174 of 354 105mm Howitzers, and a 90 per cent aggregate reduction in deliveries of trucks.

If weapons and equipment jeopardized by the House action are not received, this would be the effect on the Army as described by Secretary Pace:

"First as to the effect on the Active Army. Our present delivery program calls for the Active Army to be fully equipped by 30 June 1953, and by the same time for our civilian components to be equipped at 50% of their table of equipment allowances—and only then if there is no drain in FY 1953 on our equipment because of hostilities in Korea or elsewhere. Under this $46 billion expenditure ceiling, this target date would be set back at least one full year. (Discussion off the record.)

"Second, as to the effect if hostilities in Korea continue after 30 June 1952. We have assumed throughout that none of these weapons and equipment would be consumed in hostilities in Korea after 30 June 1952. Should hostilities continue after that date we would have to take these arms and combat equipment out of the hands of the active forces in the United States and ship them overseas, thereby reducing further the combat readiness of such troops. Moreover, if these hostilities should be prolonged, we may well be driven to withdraw some of the modern equipment which is urgently needed to equip our forces in Europe. The fact that we estimate that the war in Korea during the Fiscal Year 1952 will consume approximately $2.8 billion worth of weapons, combat equipment and ammunition, gives some idea of the amount of equipment that might have to be diverted from our forces here in the United States or in Europe should the war in Korea continue.

"Third, the five Army Divisions and other supporting troops in Europe represent a key force in the NATO defense structure. These forces would be among those troops bearing the initial impact of any Communist aggression there. Should this expenditure limitation be placed in effect, our U. S. troops in Europe will not be fully equipped with modern arms until a year later than is now planned. Meanwhile, we will not have sufficient weapons and equipment on hand or on order to support these divisions should the Communists attack in Europe.

"Finally, and equally important, would be the disastrous effect of this expenditure limitation upon the production base which is so important to our preparedness program. We have been endeavoring for nearly two years to build from scratch the industrial capacity to provide us with the weapons we urgently need. The orders for these weapons have been on the order books of industry for some time. Now that we are about to realize on all this effort and reach a point when the weapons we have ordered could be made available to us at rates of delivery already modest when measured against the dangers we face, the proposed expenditure reduction will prevent us from accepting the weapons we have ordered. The proposal not only would prevent us from proceeding with the build-up of our military strength at a rate which has already been criticized in the past as being too slow, but also require us by the end of FY 1953, virtually to destroy, other than for ammunition, the expandable production base we have taken such pains and expense to establish. The net result of this is that we would have neither the essential things on hand nor the indispensable concomitant—a going production base with the expandable capacity to produce these things. The drastic cutbacks in deliveries which such an expenditure limitation would impose will, as I have pointed out, require sizable reductions in Army orders. In some cases, Army contracts will have to be terminated. I have with me a list of representative major contractors whose Army orders will have to be cut back if the $46 billion expenditure limitation is imposed. In many cases, Army contractors will be required to reconvert to civilian production. The chain reaction upon sub-contractors and small business will spread the impact far beyond these major suppliers. This will mean the disintegration of our production base."

General Collins Testifies

General J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, stressed that if an aggressor moves, Army forces on the front lines will bear the brunt of the heavy fighting—and casualties.

"We must face the realities," said General Collins, "that when we deploy our forces in defensive positions overseas where they can be attacked, they must have the weapons and ammunition to back them up. To do less," he warned, "would be to invite the possibility of disastrous casualties."

General Collins declared that the spending limitation would wreck the carefully devised Army buildup program launched in September 1950.

Here are excerpts from General Collins' testimony:

"Trucks: Our tactical trucks are the backbone of our Army's mobility in combat. It is unthinkable to have troops deployed overseas in action, as they are in Korea, or under the threat of attack by numerically greater forces, as they are in Europe, without backing them up with the trucks needed to support them in action. But that is exactly what would happen if the expenditure limitation is imposed.

"Let me illustrate what I mean. Under the expenditure limitation we will have on hand at the end of FY 53 trucks just sufficient to equip our forces overseas to give the troops at home one half of their authorized allowance (which is sufficient for training but not enough to permit the prompt deployment of these troops in action) and to give the National Guard and Reserves 28% of their training allowances. This would not leave a single truck in a depot anywhere.

In other words, we could not replace the inevitable losses of our units in action without stripping other units.

"During FY 1951 alone, we lost more than 35,000 2½-ton trucks, weapons carriers and jeeps in Korea. This number is 25 per cent greater than the number of vehicles which would be available for the National Guard and the Organized Reserves under the limitation even if we stripped our overseas forces of all reserves. Actually, we could not use these trucks for training purposes at home and deny our exposed American troops overseas what they need to back them up. And yet, even if we stripped our National Guard and Reserve units, our troops overseas would not have enough vehicles to support them in combat if they were attacked.

"Furthermore, because this limitation in most cases would shut down our production lines, we could not expect any truck deliveries during the first year of a war, and we would have to cripple part of the Active Army in the United States to a point where it could not even train. This situation is unacceptable to me as Chief of Staff of the Army and I could not support it.

"Tanks: We have in production a medium tank which we think is more than a match for any other medium tank in the world. If this expenditure limitation is made we shall have to eliminate over 3,000 mediums, with the result that we could build only 300 tanks for our Army during the entire fiscal year. This means that we would not be able during Fiscal Year 1953 to support our overseas troops, including those on the front lines in Korea, with any spare modern tanks. We would also be left with almost an 80 per cent shortage in our requirements for our newly developed post-World War II tanks for the active Army in the United States. Furthermore, we could not give a single modern tank to the National Guard or the Organized Reserves for training nor would there be a single modern tank in any of our depots.

"During FY 1951 when the North Koreans used tanks sparingly, we lost over 400 of our World War II medium tanks from all causes—mines, battlefield wear-out, and enemy tank action—twice the number we would have available for combat replacement if we took every modern medium tank out of the hands of our troops in the United States. Of course, during the Korean conflict more than 700 Soviet mediums have been destroyed and in direct tank action, we have knocked out the Soviet tanks in the ratio of 5 to 1. World War II statistics show that in violent combat, such as our men in Europe would be plunged into if they were attacked, the tank losses amounted to 14 per cent per month.

"Therefore, if this limitation is imposed, we could not support our Army forces on the front lines.

"Antiaircraft: The Army's antiaircraft role in the defense of the United States, of our own troops overseas, and of the Air Force bases around the world is a cause of constant concern to us. We actually need several hundred AA battalions for our defense, but we have only been able to establish less than half the number of active battalions required.

"The destructiveness of enemy bombs and the speed and range of enemy planes make it imperative that our antiaircraft defenses be as tight as we can possibly make them. We have deployed our AA units around our vital atomic energy and industrial centers, and Strategic Air Command bases at home and overseas. We feel there is nothing more important to the American people than to guard their homes from enemy attack. I mention this because I feel many Americans do not realize the effectiveness of ground fire against aircraft. During World War II we lost many more planes to enemy antiaircraft fire than to enemy planes. And in Korea, 87 per cent of the United Nations' planes lost in combat have been lost because of enemy ground fire.

"Our new antiaircraft guns and guided missiles will make our AA defenses tremendously more effective. We are running operational tests on the Nike missiles and they are living up to our most optimistic expectations. When they are in the hands of our units our antiaircraft defense will be many times tighter.

"One of the key items in our air defense is the T-33 fire control set. It has been especially developed to meet the threat of faster flying planes and is not only more effective than World War II equipment but permits our weapons to fire at greater ranges and higher altitudes. Our guns and missiles, no matter how good they are in themselves, are no better than the fire control equipment which directs them. The T-33 is used with our 90 mm and 120 mm guns as well as with our new missiles. We need this new equipment not only for our active forces but for our National Guard units which we consider a vital part of the nation's antiaircraft defenses-in-being. If the expenditure limitation is imposed only about 30 per cent of our National Guard AA units whom we count on for D-Day readiness will have the T-33 equipment.

"Communications Equipment: Effective command in modern battle depends largely upon modern communications equipment. The Korean consumption of battlefield radios—handy talkies and walkie-talkies—in FY 1951 was over 22,000, nearly twice the number which would be available for the National Guard and Organized Reserve forces under the proposed expenditure limitation even if we denied our exposed troops overseas the back-up they need. Consequently, under these circumstances, it is doubtful that we could afford to issue these sets to our National Guard and Reserve. Furthermore, we would only be able to equip our active Army in the United States with 50 per cent of their needs. The situation is similar to that of the trucks which I described in more detail, and is one which I could not recommend.

"I should like to revert to the serious implications of a reduction in our truck program. Modern warfare demands that our combat forces possess maximum possible mobility. Both in defense and in attack, mobility is essential and it cannot be achieved against a modern equipped enemy without large numbers of dependable vehicles. In one infantry division alone more than 2,500 motor vehicles are necessary to support the division in combat. If these vehicles are not available, the striking power of our forces is greatly impaired and our defensive strength is greatly reduced.

"Our victory in World War II and our successes in Korea were dependent on mobility and fire power. We acquired mobility by having available ample quantities of motor vehicles. While our fire power was dependent on reliable and accurate weapons supplied with adequate quantities of ammunition, it was equally dependent on the means of getting the ammunition to the men who could use it at the time they needed it—the men on the firing line.

"One of the principal reasons our great Eighth Army in Korea was able to stem the communist tide against overwhelming numbers was our possession of tactical trucks, superior both in quantity and quality to those of the enemy. It was because of this that General Walker was able to shift his extremely limited reserves rapidly and effectively. And the classic defense of the Pusan perimeter, which prevented our forces from being pushed into the sea, was due in large measure to the mobility that our motor transportation gave us.

"The potentiality for the use of great air power and atomic weapons by a possible enemy also requires greater emphasis on mobility. Our fighting units in the future must be more dispersed than ever before if our soldiers are to survive on the battlefield. Dispersion requires large numbers of trucks and other vehicles as well as completely modern communications equipment if our troops are to fight on broader and deeper frontages and still fight effectively.

"The crippling reductions I have mentioned do not even consider the effect of the continuation of the conflict in Korea into the next fiscal year. Should this occur, equipment would be consumed much more rapidly and we would have to deny even more equipment to the National Guard and the Organized Reserves as well as the Regular Army in the United States. Obviously, the effect on the training of our forces here at home would be most serious."

Army Alaska Commander

Maj. Gen. William M. Miley, USA, has arrived in Alaska to assume command of all Army troops in the Territory. Formerly Director of the Joint Airborne Troop Board, he succeeds Maj. Gen. J. W. Cunningham, USA, who recently returned to the Zone of the Interior.

On hand to welcome the general upon his arrival were Lt. Gen. William E. Kepner, USAF, Commander-in-Chief, Alaskan Command; Maj. Gen. William D. Old, USAF, Commanding General, Alaskan Air Command; Brig. Gen. C. W. Pence, USA, Army Commander since General Cunningham's departure; Brig. Gen. W. R. Agee, USAF, Commanding General, 39th Air Depot Wing; and Col. Garnett H. Wilson, Commanding Officer, Fort Richardson.

Medical Officers Chosen

Col. Frederick J. Knoblauch, MC, Deputy Chairman of the Medical Research and Development Board, and Lt. Col. Harold E. Ratcliffe, MC, chief of the Board's Medical Research Branch, have been nominated as member and deputy member, respectively, of the newly formed Army Research Committee.

The function of the committee will be to provide assistance to Maj. Gen. W. H. Maris, Chief of the Army Research and Development Division, and the Assistant Chiefs of Staff in the planning and supervision of the Army's basic research program. In addition, the committee will make recommendations on matters of research policy, programming and procedure.

Audit Agency Vacancies

Requests of qualified company grade officers for detail to Finance Corps will receive "serious consideration" by Career Management Branch of the Adjutant General's Office, it was reported this week. Col. H. E. Reed, Chief, Army Audit Agency, said he anticipates that 50 vacancies will have to be filled during calendar year 1952.

While preference will be given to officers who are Certified Public Accountants, men with college degrees in accounting will be accepted. Applicants should have a minimum of one year to serve. Those on overseas orders should not apply. Civil Service assignments will be offered upon completion of military service.

Qualified officers should request "detail to Finance Corps for duty with Army Audit Agency," under the provisions of AR 605-145. No further directives will be issued.

Officers selected will be given assignments in one of Army Audit Agency's 200 residencies throughout the United States and abroad, or in one of the seven regional offices supervising the residencies.

Pathology Society President

Lt. Col. Colin F. Vorder Bruegge, MC, Assistant to the Director of the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, has been elected President of the Washington, D. C. Society of Pathologists.

Lt. Col. Lorenz E. Zimmerman, MC, a member of the staff of the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, has been awarded the Legion of Merit for exceptionally meritorious service as commanding officer of the mobile medical laboratory attached to the 8217th Army Unit in Korea. A reflection-free faceplate, and new advances in electron optics, combine to give you TV's clearest pictures—on this new RCA 21-inch metal-shell television picture tube.

New, metal-shell television tube makes pictures more realistic!

Benefits for the TV audience were immediate when RCA, in 1949, introduced its first metal-shell picture tube. Engineered for mass production, this new tube made larger television pictures available to more people. Subsequent RCA developments in the same field have resulted in progressively better and better home receivers.

Now RCA scientists and engineers—working on principles pioneered at the David Sarnoff Research Center of RCA—have gone even further. Improved methods of focusing, based on the latest advances in the science of electron optics, assure more realistic images on your television picture tube.

In addition, the improved Filterglass faceplate is used as the "screen" in the new television picture tube. Optically superior in quality, this faceplate diffuses room reflections, transmits a uniformly bright image to the entire television screen, and permits a wider-angle viewing.

Enthusiastic reception by the industry has resulted in the use of this new tube by leading manufacturers. Be sure, when selecting a television set, to see those with the RCA metal-shell picture tube.

Nominate Navy JAG

The President has nominated Capt. Ira H. Nunn to be Judge Advocate General of the Navy with the rank of Rear Admiral, for a term of four years.

THE JOURNAL has previously reported (29 March) that Captain Nunn was being considered for the post. He will succeed Rear Adm. George L. Russell, whose term expires on 18 June. Admiral Russell will go to a sea assignment which has not yet been announced.

Captain Nunn, who was selected last July for flag rank, is currently serving as executive assistant and senior aide to Admiral William M. Fichteler, Chief of Naval Operations.

To Command Princeton

Capt. William R. Hollingsworth has been ordered detached from the Pearl Harbor staff of Admiral Arthur W. Radford, Pacific Fleet Commander in Chief, to report for duty as commanding officer of the heavy aircraft carrier Princeton. Currently Assistant Chief of Staff for Operations at CinCPacFleet, he will relieve Capt. P. D. Stroop aboard the 27,000-ton vessel. The ship is presently on the west coast.

Navy Confirmations

The Senate this week confirmed the nominations of Vice Admirals John H. Cassady and Matthias B. Gardner to have three-star rank while serving as Commander of the Sixth Fleet and Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for Air, respectively.

U. S. NAVY & MARINE CORPS

Nurse Corps Conference

The Chiefs of the Nursing Services, from the 25 Naval Hospitals located in the United States, will attend a four-day conference convening 19 May at the National Naval Medical Center, Bethesda, Md., it is announced by Capt. Winnie Gibson, Director, Navy Nurse Corps.

Prominent civilian and military leaders who will participate in the conference are: Dr. R. Louise McManus, Director, Division of Nursing Education, Teachers College, Columbia University, New York City; Sister Mary Geraldine Kulleck, Dean, School of Nursing, University of St. Louis, St. Louis, Missouri; Dr. Esther B. Strong, Staff Member, Women's Affairs, Military Personnel Policy Division, Office Secretary of Defense; Col. Ruby Bryant, Chief, Army Nurse Corps; and Col. Verena Zeller, Chief, Air Force Nurse Corps. Captain Winnie Gibson will preside as Chairman.

They will be welcomed to the Naval Medical Center by Rear Adm. Bertram Groesbeck, Jr., MC, USN, the Center Commander. At the opening session of the Conference, the following Naval officials will speak: Rear Adm. Lamont Pugh, MC, USN, Surgeon General of the Navy; Rear Adm. Robert F. Hickey, USN, Chief of Information; Rear Adm. Frederick C. Greaves, MC, USN, Inspector General, Medical Department; Capt. Bartholomew W. Hogan, MC, USN, Commanding Officer, Naval, Bethesda; and Captain Gibson.

Cut Marine Leave Time

The Marine Corps has established a new leave policy which sets a maximum delay-en route time for Marine officers changing stations.

Officers returning from overseas for a permanent change of station will be allowed a maximum of 15 days in reporting to their new duty station.

Officers being assigned duty requiring a permanent change of station within the Continental U. S., or for duty overseas, including duty in the Far East, will be allowed not more than 10 days delay in reporting to their new duty stations.

Headquarters said the curtailment was brought about because of a "critical officer personnel situation" and that the policy would continue in effect "until such time as the officer personnel situation improves and personnel are available for the Marine Corps to meet its commitments and accomplish its missions."

Exceptions to the new leave policy will be considered only by Headquarters "on the hardship and merit of the individual case." Orders issued prior to 2 May will not be modified except in cases where the situation is such as to make modification necessary, the order said.

Need Legal Officers

The Marine Corps announced, that it has an "urgent and continuing need" for legal officers on active duty, and invites Reserve officers who are members of the bar of a Federal court or of the highest court of a State to submit requests for retention on active duty for "legal duties."

Requests must originate prior to 1 June, and must be for not less than 12 months and not more than 24 months from 1 July 1952. Naval aviators who request such assignment must also request revocation of flying duty if accepted for legal duties.

Officers requesting such duty will be retained on active duty until action is completed on their request. Those accepted will be notified by 1 July.

Marine Reserve Board

The Marine Corps Reserve Policy Board will meet at Headquarters on or about 9 June for the purpose of advising the Secretary of the Navy on the formulation of Marine Corps Reserve policies.

Recommendations and suggestions for consideration by the Board have been invited from all members of the Marine Corps, both Regular and Reserve. Topics for consideration may be forwarded to the Commandant (Code AF) in letter form, with a brief explanation of subject matter when necessary. They should reach Headquarters on or before 16 May.

Marines Face Atom

An important "first" for the Marine Corps took place last week when two thousand Marines took part in a large scale atomic exercise at the Nevada Proving Grounds.

The Marines, like Army and Air Force troops which participated in similar tests last week, were dug in only 7,000 yards from the area where the bomb was dropped. They included two provisional composite battalions made up of Marine troops from Camp Lejeune, N. C., and Camp Pendleton, Calif.

This week's tests were twice postponed because of bad weather, giving emphasis to statements made last week by General John E. Hull, Army Vice Chief of Staff. General Hull had indicated that air delivery of the bomb in support of ground troops would not always be feasible due to weather conditions. He stressed the importance of continued development of atomic artillery which would know no weather limitations.

The Marine troops, like their predecessors, moved forward in "attack" formation soon after the bomb drop, to take an objective near ground zero at the approximate center of the impact area.

House Cut to be Returned

Under Secretary of the Navy Francis P. Whitehair said this week he believes the four billion dollars which was removed from the 1953 appropriations by the House of Representatives will be returned to the Services.

Speaking to a group of officers at the Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va., on 7 May, Secretary Whitehair said he thinks "the action of the House may yet be reversed, that the Senate will repair the damage done, and that the House on second and more deliberate thought will approve the repairing."

By voting to place "an arbitrary ceiling of 46 billion dollars on defense expenditures," Mr. Whitehair said the House cut into the muscle of the Defense Department.

Release Marine Reserves

Marine Corps Reservists, either inactive or members of organized MCR units, may now resign or be discharged at their own request if they served on active duty prior to 24 June 1948 and again in the present emergency.

In announcing its new policy, Headquarters said, "Many such reservists have been handicapped in commercial life because of their reserve affiliation."

Marine Reserves who entered the armed forces prior to the date of the Selective Service Act, 24 June 1948, and who have completed a second tour of extended active duty since 30 June 1950, may be released from the Reserve. "Active duty for training is not considered as extended active duty," Headquarters said.

Approximately 38,000 Marine Reservists are eligible for release under the new plan.

Enlisted members of organized Marine Corps Reserve units may be discharged by commanding officers. Inactive enlisted men may be released by their Reserve District Directors. All reserve officers eligible to resign must obtain permission of the Secretary of the Navy.

Marine Confirmations

The Senate this week confirmed the permanent appointment of Major Generals Christian F. Schilt and Thomas J. Cushman, and Brigadier Generals Gregon A. Williams and Frank H. Lamson Scribner.

Confirmed as temporary Brigadier Generals were Arthur H. Butler and Thomas A. Wornham, who head two of the Marine Corps General Staff sections.

Navy Conference

More than 200 members of leading research organizations in the United States, Great Britain and Canada met in Washington this week for a three-day Operations Research Decennial Conference.

The conference, attended by ranking scientists and administrators from foremost academic institutions, and Navy officers, was called by Rear Adm. C. M. Bolster, Chief of Naval Research.

Rear Adm. M. E. Curtis, Assistant Chief of Naval Operations for Readiness, said, "Operations research helps the Navy to do the best it can with what it has now, and to get the best to meet future needs. ... It helps solve the long-range problems that our Naval forces must face in defending the United States and in supporting forces overseas—such problems as the best use of nuclear weapons and the best defense against them, and the protection of overseas transport from submarines, mines, and air attacks. In other words, the problems of how to select the best weapons and to use them in the best way at the best time."

Naval speakers at the opening sessions will be Vice Adm. F. S. Low, Assistant Chief of Naval Operations for Logistics; Rear Adm. Wilder D. Baker, Commandant of the Eleventh Naval District; Admiral Bolster, the host at the conference; and Admiral Curtis, whose area of responsibility includes the Naval aspects of the group's work.

In addition to the technical sessions of the conference, there was on 8 May a Decennial Dinner at the Hotel Carlton, to celebrate the Operations Evaluation Group's tenth birthday. Principal speakers at the dinner were Dan A. Kimball, Secretary of the Navy; John F. Floberg, Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Air and Comptroller of the Navy; Dr. J. R. Killian, President of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; and Prof. P. M. Morse, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Net and Boom School

A Net and Boom Defense School has been established at the U. S. Naval Net Depot at Melville, R. I. The first class convened on 5 May and later classes will convene on the first Monday of each month.

The school offers a two-week course for officer and enlisted reservists on inactive duty. Its curriculum includes a study of the history of Nets and Booms and practical training in working with nets and allied equipment.

Reservists who are interested should contact local U. S. Naval Reserve Armories or write to the District Commandants.

Commands Radio Station

Capt. Harold R. Demarest, USN, has relieved Capt. Richard E. Elliott, USN, as Commanding Officer of the U. S. Naval Radio Transmitting Station, Annapolis, Md. Captain Elliott, who has commanded the Transmitting Station since January, 1949, has been ordered to the Hawaiian Sea Frontier at Pearl Harbor, T. H., for duty as the Staff Communications Officer.

Applauds USNR Aviators

Naval Reserve aviators in Korea have been so aggressive and willing to fight that the Navy at times had to make them exercise more caution, Vice Adm. Harold M. Martin has revealed.

Admiral Martin, Commander, Air Force, Pacific Fleet, said in a recent letter to Rear Adm. L. A. Moebus, Chief of Naval Air Reserve Training, that the operations of the Reserve aviators "under difficult flying conditions were something that all Naval officers were proud to associate with the Navy itself." He added, "It is difficult to visualize the predicament we would have been in if they had not been available to us. I sincerely believe that this country never before has had a Reserve so splendidly trained and ready to meet any sudden emergency."

The former Commander of the Seventh Fleet said the manner in which the Reservists "performed all their assigned tasks can only be described as outstanding." He said, "It is my sincere hope that we will profit from our experience in Korea and continue to maintain our Naval Air Reserve Program at peak efficiency." In order to do this, he said "we must arrange to obtain young aviators and to provide them with modern equipment so they can be maintained at the present peak of efficiency."

When you move, notify the Army Navy Air Force Journal of your change of address so you will not miss any issues.

Sub Training Open

Applications from Lieutenants (jg), and Ensigns of the Regular Navy and Naval Reserve on active duty are desired for the submarine training class convening the first week in January, 1953, at the Submarine School, New London, Conn., the Navy has announced.

Officers selected for the school will not be ordered to training until they have completed at least one year of active commissioned service by 1 Jan. 1953.

Lieutenants (jg) who apply must have dates of rank of 1 July 1950 or later, and Ensigns must have dates of rank prior to 1 July 1951 and applications must reach the Bureau of Naval Personnel prior to 1 Sept. 1952, the Navy said.

Officers applying for submarine training must be qualified to stand deck watch underway and must agree not to resign during the course of instruction and to serve one year in the Naval service on active duty following the successful completion of the training period. The length of the course is six months.

America would not be the great nation but for men like Alexander Hamilton... men who knew the dangers and pitfalls of bad government... men whose integrity made them capable of governing others well.

Every day we are confronted with headlines that prove only too conclusively that persons in responsible positions place their own selfish wants ahead of the needs of those who put them there. Scandals and corruption make sensational reading. But it is the innocent people who suffer in the long run.

Can we not revert to the principles of men such as Alexander Hamilton... men who practiced self-control and self-government... and only then considered themselves fit to govern others?

Historic Landing

The first aircraft landing at the geographic North Pole was made 3 May when a ski-wheeled C-47 of the Alaskan Air Command landed on the pack ice there to make scientific observations in connection with the Air Force's polar expedition "Ice Island."

Maj. Gen. William D. Old, USAF, Commanding Alaskan Air Command, announced the landing. Lt. Col. William P. Benedict piloted the aircraft for this historic event.

The flight took off from T-3, Fletcher's ice island, for the 135 mile flight. Three hours and ten minutes were spent on the ice at the pole while scientists accompanying the flight made various measurements including ocean depth and gravity field strength.

Lt. Col. Joseph Fletcher, who established the outpost on T-3, also made the flight as co-pilot. Colonel Fletcher has been living at the floating ice island since 19 March, when he and two others were left there to establish camp in 60 below zero temperatures. Since that time, a weather observation station has been set up whose regular reports are proving of considerable value in northern area forecast.

Colonel Fletcher's T-3 became host to the crew of a Navy P2V Neptune which was stranded there 6 April because of engine failure. A make-shift runway was then built to accommodate an Air Force C-54 four-engine transport for delivery of a new engine to the crippled Navy patrol plane. With the departure of the aircraft a week ago, ice islanders life returned to "normal."

Extend Flight Applications

Air National Guard and Reserve airmen not in the active military service now may apply for aviation cadet training with the Air Force if they are high school graduates.

Heretofore, these airmen needed two years of college in order to apply for appointment as an aviation cadet. However, the educational requirement was changed 23 Nov., 1951, to high school diploma for active duty airmen.

Since the Air Force desires to eliminate as far as possible any distinction between Reserve and Regular, it was decided that the educational qualification now applicable to airmen in the active service would apply to airmen of the Reserve and Air National Guard not in the active military service. Other requirements remain the same: unmarried male citizens of the United States, 19 to 26½ years of age, of good moral character and sound physique.

Air Training Command has asked CrewTAF to accept two students from advance single engine (jet) and two from multi-engine courses to undergo training in the Boeing B-47 Stratojet medium bomber. FlyTAF will select four men from class 52-C to report to Wichita AFB, Kansas and enter Jet B-47 Course 52-13 which gets underway on 26 May and lasts 16 weeks.

At the present time, the majority of personnel receiving training in the B-47 jet bomber courses are officers transferred from the Strategic Air Command with over 1500 hours of flying time of which a large portion must be in multi-engine aircraft. It is foreseen by the Air Force that this source for B-47 crews will soon be exhausted under the stepped up program now being contemplated. The test to be conducted at Wichita will aid in setting up future programs.

Fill Newfoundland Posts

Two new staff appointments have been announced in United States Northeast Command (USNEC) Headquarters at Pepperrell AFB, Newfoundland, according to Maj. Gen. Charles T. Myers, Commander in Chief.

Col. Richard C. Kugel has been appointed Assistant Deputy Commander, Plans and Operations, HQ, USNEC, with additional duty as Assistant Deputy Commander, Plans and Operations, in Northeast Air Command Headquarters.

Succeeding Colonel Kugel as Director, Operations and Training, HQ, USNEC, is Lt. Col. Hugh D. Maxwell, jr. Colonel Maxwell will also have additional duty as Director, Operations and Training, in Northeast Air Command Headquarters.

AF Officer Assignment

The Department of the Air Force has reported to Congress, as required by law, that for the third quarter of fiscal 1952 an aggregate of 2,500 Air Force officers was assigned to the "executive element of the Air Force at the seat of government." Included in the report was the suggestion that "the number of officers on duty is considered the minimum required to fulfill existing obligations of the Department of Defense."

Existing law provides that "except in time of war or national emergency declared by the Congress, or upon a special finding by the President, not more than 2,800 officers shall be assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the executive element of the Air Force at the seat of government."

Training Pay Ruling

The Air Force is amending AFR 45-10 to permit major commands to give training pay to individuals assigned to AF Reserve units who participate in the civilian contract school training program up to six periods per month or 48 per fiscal year. Heretofore, members could not be paid in excess of four periods per month although they might have attended six periods.

ANG Return Schedule

The Air Force has announced a schedule for return to State control of tactical Air National Guard units called to active military service during the present emergency.

Scheduled to return during July, November and December 1952, and January 1953 are 330 Air Guard units from 44 states and the District of Columbia.

Personnel who came on duty with the Air National Guard units and who have not voluntarily extended their tours will be eligible, regardless of present assignment, for separation no later than these ANG units.

The Air Force will activate new units to replace the Air National Guard units returning to their respective States. These new units will take over the aircraft and equipment of the returning Guard units.

When the movement home is completed in January 1953 virtually all tactical units of the Air Guard now in active service will have returned to State control and training. The States have been authorized to establish cadre units for the purpose of receiving equipment from the Air Force as it becomes available and for recruiting key personnel.

Since many of the guardsmen on active duty will probably remain voluntarily on extended active duty with the Air Force, the remaining of returned units would be the first objective of States involved, with resumption of flying to follow.

Approximately 80 per cent of the Air National Guard is now on active duty.

Staff Changes at ADF Unit

Maj. Gen. George R. Acheson, USAF, Commanding General of Central Air Defense Force, has announced several major staff changes within Headquarters Central Air Defense Force, Kansas City, Mo.

Col. Clay Tice, jr., director of Combat Operations, has been assigned as commanding officer of the 3595th Training Group, Nellis AFB, Las Vegas, Nev. He will assume his new duties after completing a 90-day Korean combat tour of duty in F-86 jet fighters.

Maj. Leonard F. Gonyea has been assigned deputy commander of the 109th Fighter-Interceptor Squadron, Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport, Minn.

Col. Joseph J. Foss has replaced Major Gonyea as Tactical Air Inspector at Central Air Defense Force Headquarters. Col. George W. Stalnaker has taken over Colonel Foss' former position as Director of Operations and Training, and Col. William A. Schulgen has replaced Colonel Stalnaker as Inspector General.

1st Lt. Mont E. Goodell has replaced Capt. Charles A. Marvin as aide-de-camp to General Acheson. Captain Marvin departed recently for an assignment in North Africa.

Temp. Promotions In ADRC

The following Air Research and Development Command officers have received temporary promotions to the grade of 1st Lt. in the USAF as of 29 April:

Brock, William C	Gookin, Landon E, jr
Burke, William J	Hughes, Vernon M
Fuller, Alan C	Lastrapes, James A
Golding, Edwin I	Selby, Russell E

AF Temp. Promotions

The USAF Headquarters selection board considering officers for temporary promotions to colonel and lieutenant colonel in the third cycle of advancements still was in session late this week.

Air Force officials estimate that it probably will be about 1 June before the first temporary promotions in the third cycle are announced.

The board to name officers for promotion to major and captain will meet at the Pentagon on 21 May.

Major commanders have made their selections, which have been sent to the Pentagon for approval.

Three Year Instructor Tour

The Air Force will issue shortly a new regulation entitled "Air Training Command Instructors and Liaison Officers" which will establish three years as the normal tour of duty for all ATRC instructors.

The regulation will also prevent the reassignment of instructors until completion of the tour and will provide that instructors will be reported to USAF Headquarters upon completion of the tour, for reassignment against worldwide requirements. The regulation will give the Air Training Command increased authority in selection and assignment of instructors.

Airmen Title Changes

The Air Force has released the official regulation which changed the grades, titles and terms of address of many enlisted personnel.

AFR 39-36, dated 24 April, states that the use of the term "airman" on a basis comparable to "soldier" or "sailor" should aid "in distinguishing the enlisted personnel of the Air Force from those of the other services and in identifying them more closely with their chosen service in the national defense structure."

New Maintenance Hangars

New maintenance hangars, capable of handling the largest aircraft produced or now planned by the Air Force, have been designed under a contract with the Army Corps of Engineers.

The hangars are the largest ever designed for the Air Force. The biggest has a ground floor dimension of 600 by 250 feet and uses enough steam to heat a community of 250 average-size houses. An innovation is the location of shops in the center of the hangar instead of along the two sides.

The hangars were designed by the Kuljian Corporation of Philadelphia, Penna., under Army supervision.

Radiated Desert Rats

Certificates of membership in a rare new organization known as the Royal Order of Radiated Desert Rats have been received by eighteen officers at the Air Force School of Aviation Medicine, Randolph AFB, Tex. The Desert Rats are those who took part in the atomic bomb tests last winter in Nevada.

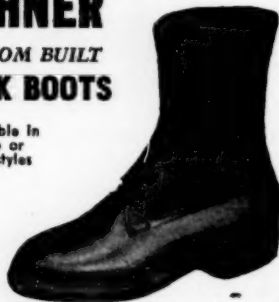

"Know ye by these presents," proclaims the elegant diploma of the Order, "that —has been stuck in the finger; has breathed and bitten the dust; has broiled in the day; has frozen at night; and has dined at Desert Rock."

"Forsaking all else, wife, PX, civilization, etc., he has seen a Big Boom and has suffered busted eardrums and jangled nerves, showing the true valor of a member of RORDR, and is Knighted in the Rodents."

Army Aviation Deliveries

Much has been made of the threatened delays in delivery of Air Force and Navy aircraft as a result of the House action in limiting defense expenditures to $46 billion during the coming fiscal year.

However, Congressional testimony reveals that the Army would lose a large number of aircraft also if the House action stands.

The Army wants to accept delivery during fiscal year '53 of 814 helicopters of all types, but might have to cut this to 221 under the House limitation.

Similarly, compared with 818 deliveries scheduled of fixed-wing Army planes, only 220 deliveries might be possible under the ceiling.

Seek AF Lawyers

Immediate active duty assignments are available in the Air Force for a number of well qualified lawyers to be selected for appointment in the Air Force Reserve, Judge Advocate General's Department, under Air Force Manual 36-5, amended. Moreover, opportunities exist for appointment in the Regular Air Force (JAGD) of officers of the Reserve Forces who have completed 12 months active Federal commissioned service within the 3-year period preceding application.

Major General Reginald C. Harmon, The Judge Advocate General, United States Air Force, pointed out that airmen in active military service are invited to apply provided they meet eligibility criteria, and should be encouraged to do so. Principal needs at this time are for officers in the grades of first lieutenant and captain. For appointment as First Lieutenant, Air Force Reserve (JAGD), an applicant must be a graduate of an accredited law school and be a member of the bar of a Federal court or of the highest court of a State of the United States, and must not have reached his 34th birthday. In this connection, a graduate of an accredited law school may apply for appointment prior to admission to the bar. However, actual appointment will not be tendered until documentary evidence has been submitted showing admission to the bar.

For appointment in the grade of Captain, Air Force Reserve (JAGD), an applicant must possess all the qualifications for appointment as first lieutenant and must not have reached his 40th birthday; in addition, he must have had a minimum of 4 years of actual legal experience subsequent to admission to the bar.

Submissions of applications by Air Force enlisted personnel and Warrant Officers on active duty is through immediate commanding officer to the Commanding General of the Continental Air Command numbered air forces in whose area the person is stationed; or, if stationed overseas, to the commanding general of the major air command having jurisdiction over the area in which the person is stationed.

Applicants having no active military status should submit their applications direct to the commanding general of the Continental Air Command air force in whose territory the person resides; or, if residing overseas, to the commanding general of the major air command having jurisdiction over the area in which the person is located.

Letters of inquiry regarding application forms, etc., and other pertinent information should be addressed to:

Hospital Personnel

A team of experts from the Office of the Army Surgeon General is currently making a survey of personnel requirements at Fitzsimons Army Hospital, Denver, Colo. The group's findings will be used as a basis for determining future military and civilian personnel needs at large named Army hospitals in this country and Hawaii.

Members of the team include Col. O. Elliott Ursin, MC; Lt. Col. Inez Haynes, ANC, and Maj. Howard J. Funston, MSC, all of the SGO Personnel Division; Maj. Charles F. McAleer, jr., MSC, of the Medical Plans and Operations Division, and Lt. Col. Harold E. Ratcliffe, MC, of the Army Medical Research and Development Board. The survey will be concluded on 16 May.

"If we make the proper use of the time that is allowed to us to strengthen our forces, we can build a deterrent that the Soviet Union may respect, and we may avoid having a war at all."—GENERAL OF THE ARMY OMAR N. BRADLEY.

Truce in Korea. Late this week the Korean truce negotiations appeared on the verge of collapse over the issue of forced repatriation of many thousands of Communist war prisoners and interned civilians held by the Allies. All other points of disagreement have been resolved, leaving the prisoner question as the sole obstacle to an early Korean armistice. The continued obstinance of the Reds in demanding the forcible return of all prisoners, including some 57,000 military prisoners who have renounced Communism, ends all hope of an early peace, unless there is a reversal of this position. President Truman and British Foreign Minister Anthony Eden have made it abundantly clear that there is no intention of turning back to the Reds for "slaughter or slavery" many thousands of soldiers who surrendered to the Allies, and who now refuse to return willingly to their former masters. This position of the Allied powers is irrevocable and will not be modified. It is the only humanitarian attitude possible under the circumstances. True, the Reds have promised that there will be no reprisals, but no one knows better than those who have lived under Communist control how small a value is to be placed on such pledges. The Allies have promised protection for those who flee from the Reds, and must prove to the world the validity of such a promise.

While prospects for an early agreement on a Korean truce are far from bright there remains a slight thread of hope, slender and tenuous, that the Reds may recede from their current position, difficult though such action is certain to be. In doing so they would suffer great loss of prestige, but they still must realize the practical advantages of such a course. After all, they would get back some 70,000 prisoners, who have agreed to return, in exchange for about 12,000 Allied personnel, mostly South Koreans, a ratio of nearly six to one. The war has proven very costly to the Reds. The combined casualties of Red China and North Korea exceed a million and a half, a tremendous sacrifice even to areas which have such vast resources of manpower. Sober consideration of these factors may induce the Reds to embrace the best possible terms for ending the conflict that has cost them so dearly.

Armed Forces Day. The keynote for the thousands of citizens who will turn out next Saturday, 17 May, for the third observance of Armed Forces Day should be the statements made this week before the Senate Appropriations Committee by the Secretaries and military chiefs of the Services. These documents, quoted at length in this issue of THE JOURNAL, reveal in detail the peril in which our forces of National Security would be placed if the cuts and restrictions imposed upon the appropriation bill by the House of Representatives are allowed to become law. Not only would there be an immediate detrimental effect upon the forces in being, but the ground, air, and sea components would suffer for years in the future. Even if the next Congress should attempt to retrieve the losses by granting substantial increases it would be too late to recapture time and return production anywhere near to the schedule now possible.

Participants in Armed Forces Day's events should also give thought to the steel and gasoline problems and how they can be solved before their impact on the defense structure produces more damage than enemy weapons.

Widows of Regulars

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

I, like thousands of other widows, am wondering if anything is going to be done about an increase in pensions. I have two small children and cannot go out and work at the present time. No matter how much I try to pinch pennies I just cannot make ends meet with the high rents and the cost of living as it is now.

Is it fair for the widows of Reserve personnel to get so much more compensation than the widows of Regular personnel? Their husbands were no better soldiers than ours. Why not break it down and give everyone an equal amount; I feel sure the widows of reserve personnel wouldn't have any complaints about that. Our monthly expenses are just the same as everyone else's, as a matter of fact more when it comes to repairs, etc. Most of us are just existing and, believe me, it's not as rosy as a lot of people on the outside think it is.

How about all of you nice people up on the Hill and at the Pentagon with fight and push getting behind us and helping to make our future brighter and our load lighter?

Efficiency Reports

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

The Dept. of the Army and THE JOURNAL rate a pat on the back for the series of articles on efficiency reports by Dr. Rundquist. Most of us at one time or another have had some squawks about these reports. It always seemed such a hocus-pocus business.

But these articles have given us a new insight into the complexity of the problem and more importantly have assured us how industrious an effort is being made to get opinions from the field on this subject. . . .

Confidence in the efficiency reports has been considerably enhanced.

Elimination of Officers

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

I have followed with interest your articles regarding the proposed elimination of officers under the Personnel Act of 1947 and possible suspension of the law.

Is the 35 and 5 provision relative to permanent (Army) major generals being applied?

Is the 30 and 5 provision being applied for brigadier generals and colonels or if not, when will it?

What about the provision also scheduled for 1953 for the elimination of permanent lt. colonels not promoted to permanent colonel by the time they complete 28 years of service?

According to a casual survey of the permanent lt. colonels (eliminating those who have been selected but than 5,000 in the Pacific Theater. Many of their members wear the Soldier's Medal, the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star, the Army Commendation Ribbon, the Purple Heart and the service and occupation ribbons. In June, 1948, Congress authorized a permanent Women's Army Corps so that today there are 11,000 officer and enlisted WACs making their careers in the Regular Establishment. The outstanding and valuable work being done by the WAC and also by the Air Force WAF and the Navy's WAVES, was given high praise by the group of women representatives of newspapers, magazines, and radio who returned this week from a two-week tour of Europe where they observed the many functions the service women perform and the conditions under which they are living abroad.

The fact that the Army now wants to increase the WAC strength to 30,000, and the Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps also are seeking to build up their women's organizations, is the highest tribute to the manner in which they have contributed to the efficient operation of the military establishment.

THE nation's newspapers are expressing warm approval of General Matthew B. Ridgway's appointment as Supreme Allied Commander, Europe. Although many of them point out that General Gruenther would have been an equally wise choice, others say that General Ridgway's knowledge of the Asian political and military scene will be particularly valuable in NATO planning because of interests of the three largest NATO countries in the Far East.

The Little Rock Arkansas Gazette says one of General Ridgway's "greatest attributes" for the job "is the very obvious fact that the Communists are afraid of him."

The selection, according to the Chicago Sun-Times, "was as inevitable as it was excellent." General Ridgway's record "both as a tested military leader and as a soldier-diplomat, gives him the prestige needed for the NATO command."

The transfer "has special merit," the St. Louis Post Dispatch says, since it "enlists in Europe the experience of a leader who has been the UN's chief representative in the Far East."

The Dallas News states that the General will be a good man in the job "because he would be a good man anywhere."

Ridgway "evidently was chosen," the Chicago News says, "because he is the more experienced field commander." But with Gruenther remaining at SHAPE as second in command there will be "continuity of policy and teamwork between two highly competent officers."

The Richmond (Va.) Times Dispatch remarks, along these same lines, that "The prestige of Ridgway's combat record . . . plus Gruenther's steel-trap efficiency and ability to get the co-operation of the Europeans, augur well for the future."

The new commander is ranked along with MacArthur, Eisenhower and Marshall by the Des Moines Register which says he "has a large measure of that unusual quality of diplomatic skill, so rarely found in military men."

The Philadelphia Bulletin says "He had a brilliant record before he was sent to the Far East, where his talents and his discretion have been of great service."

Progress in German Peace Contract

A GAIN marked progress has been recorded in the negotiations for the peace contract with West Germany, to the point where the present draft has been made public. The draft terms are, in general, what has been predicted, and the question of prime importance remains whether Chancellor Adenauer has sufficient confidence in the support which such an agreement can get from his parliament.

The progress referred to is in the apparently favorable attitude of the Bonn lawmakers. They seem to have been impressed by the solidarity of the three western powers on almost every feature of the compact, and by the well-timed expressions from the larger membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, relative to pledging support of West Germany, a non-member, against aggression. There was mention, above, of "almost every feature"; the possible exception still is in the construction, rather than the wording, of that passage which leaves final determination of Germany's borders to a future convention of her World War II enemies. This postponement is inescapable, for Russia is not a party to the compact. But Adenauer's opponents have chosen to regard the wording as an evasion of the Saar issue which the French recently raised in most untimely manner. This wording, like the matter of German financial contributions to the common defense, will be discussed in Paris once more in the coming week.

We will have to expect more alarms and excursions until the necessary signatures are actually affixed both to the compact draft and to the six-nations' related agreement for the European Defense Community. The success of both enterprises is literally essential, if the present fortunes of the west are to be taken at flood.

It is in this atmosphere that General Eisenhower, a mighty power in both proposals, is making his farewell tours of the domain he is to yield shortly to General Matthew B. Ridgway, now on the point of quitting his Tokyo assignment. This past week General Eisenhower was given a rousing greeting in an Italy vastly transformed from the Italy of 18 months ago. He followed it with a call on Copenhagen and Oslo—thereby moving with great dispatch away from the Mediterranean and, en route, declining genially to discuss the prospects of a formally set up NATO Mediterranean command. ("I have troubles enough of my own.") This issue has again been raised (but not settled) by Admiral William Fechteler's recent trip to the East Atlantic and Mediterranean, followed by his discreet discussion of naval command matters while he was in London. The Chief of Naval Operations returned to Washington this week, having effected while overseas the redistribution of Admiral Robert B. Carney's excessive duties of the past, so that the administrative responsibilities are taken over by Vice Admiral Jerauld Wright, leaving Admiral Carney free to carry on his exacting operational tasks.

Two important diplomatic posts in Europe have been filled during the week. George Kennan, a highly qualified veteran of duty in Russia, has assumed his ambassadorial role in Moscow. Ellsworth Bunker, a newcomer of promise, has taken on ambassadorial responsibilities in Rome. Both of them have acquired impressive jobs at an important time.

As this is written, the three western powers near agreement on the answer which they will give (possibly over the weekend) to Russia's proposal for a conference with Russia on the future reunification of Germany. It has called for a good deal of study not only in Washington, London, and Paris, but in Bonn; for Moscow's prime purpose in making its proposal, of course, was to tempt West Germany away from the North Atlantic Treaty alliance by holding up the glittering possibility of a restored Germany. Moscow's bait has attracted a good many Germans (so much favorable attention as to cause worry) and an unconsidered rejection of the suggestion could do the West great damage in German eyes. But too prompt agreement with Russia, if followed by a conference without Allied unity, could be ruinous in another way, and Washington impulses in that direction have been opposed by London and Paris. Rather, it looks as though the western powers' answer to Russia would be a most cautious sort of acceptance, involving, first, proposal of an international commission (presumably of the United Nations) to examine conditions in both East and West Germany relevant to the possibility of genuinely free elections. Only with that report at hand would the four-power conference then be held, to take up the specific proposals for unification upon which free voters in Germany would ultimately express their wishes.

The U. S. Army headquarters at Heidelberg announced at the past weekend prospective discontinuance, by the end of June, of those considerable privileges (including free servants and travel facilities) which have been enjoyed to date by a considerable number of the occupation forces—paid for by Western Germany as occupation costs. Discontinuance has long been anticipated, in everything except timing. The State Department took the lead, its personnel giving up comparable privileges in West Germany some months ago. But the U. S. Army is still a long way ahead of British and French counterparts, and likely to remain so for a time; there is no present indication that Britain or France, despite diplomatic assurances, is going to enforce on its military the surrender of all their considerable comforts at German expense.

POW Issue Still Balks Truce

PRESIDENT Truman in a strong statement this week vigorously supported General Matthew B. Ridgway, USA, Commander-in-Chief of the United Nations Forces in Korea, in his refusal to force the repatriation of some 57,000 Red prisoners held by the Allies. The President declared that forced repatriation of prisoners would be repugnant to the free world. He added that we would not "buy an armistice by turning over human beings for slaughter or slavery."

Similar statements were made in Washington by Secretary of State Dean Acheson and Deputy Secretary of Defense William C. Foster, and in London by British Foreign Minister Anthony Eden. It was revealed that all powers participating on the Allied side in the Korean conflict had agreed to the recent package proposal submitted to the Reds by the United Nations command in Korea, in which the Allies consented to the reconstruction of airfields in North Korea during an armistice, provided the Reds would withdraw the nomination of Russia as a neutral armistice supervisor and exchange the 12,000 Allied prisoners held by them for some 70,000 Red prisoners in Allied camps who were willing to return to Communist control. In reply to questions of the press Mr. Foster said that as alternatives to an armistice agreement the Allies had considered blockading Red China and possible invasion of the Chinese mainland, but emphasized that no decision to take such action had been made. He said no consideration had been given to the possible use of the atomic bomb.

The refusal of the Communists to accept the voluntary repatriation of Red prisoners held by the Allies in exchange for United Nations prisoners in the hands of the Communists brought the conference to the verge of a collapse. General Ridgway disclosed that the Reds had agreed to withdraw the nomination of Russia as a neutral supervisor of an armistice, and the Allies had consented to permit airfield construction in North Korea during an armistice.

It was charged by the Communists that the Allies had agreed to return some 116,000 war prisoners, but later reduced this number to 70,000. This is denied by the United Nations representatives who declared that the 116,000 figure was an early estimate of the number it was thought might desire repatriation. A detailed survey was made during which the surprising fact developed that about 57,000 former Red soldiers, both Chinese and North Korean, refused to accept repatriation, and many of them said they would commit suicide rather than return to Communist control. Red negotiators refused to accept the accuracy of the Allied poll, but the United Nations high command offered to permit an investigation by an international body, or by joint Red Cross teams, with observers from both sides.

After the Reds had rejected flatly the Allied proposal for exchanging 70,000 Red prisoners for 12,000 Allied troops held captive by the Communists, General Ridgway made it clear that this was the final offer of the United Nations and Vice Admiral C. Turner Joy, USN, chief Allied negotiator, suggested an indefinite recess of the negotiations. Despite their refusal to accept the Allied proposal the Reds asked that the daily meetings of the conference be continued, to which the United Nations consented, with the stipulation that no further secret sessions be held.

In the present situation there appears to be little basis for real expectation of an early end to the Korean War. Negotiators throughout the week held brief, daily, but fruitless sessions. The continuance of these meetings kept alive a faint flicker of hope that some way might still be found to overcome the current impasse.

THE REFUSAL OF THE REDS, presumably on instructions from Peiping and Moscow, to consider the Allied proposal covering repatriation of war prisoners leads to the strong suspicion expressed by General James A. Van Fleet, USA, commanding the Eighth Army in Korea, that the Reds may never have intended to agree to a Korean truce, except on their own terms, but have utilized the lull in the fighting to build up their depleted troops and supplies, and thus improve their military position for possible future resumption of full-scale fighting. General Van Fleet voiced the universal opinion of his associates when he said that if the Reds really wanted an armistice they could have brought one about in the ten months that negotiations have been under way. However, the General said the Allies can either outfight the Reds or outsit them.

Red radio broadcasts this week revived charges that the United Nations command has used germ warfare in an attempt to spread disease epidemics throughout North Korea and Manchuria. Attempts were made to bolster these charges by broadcasting recordings of purported confessions made by captured American B-26 flyers, who were said to have admitted they were engaged in dropping germ-laden bombs. The alleged statements were so filled with typical Communist propaganda as to make it certain that they were prepared by the Reds, who may have forced American prisoners to repeat the charges under duress.

A CHARGE made to the United Nations this week by United States Narcotic Commissioner Harry J. Anslinger that Red China is the world's greatest source of illicit drugs was heatedly denied by Soviet Delegate V. V. Zakusov. The charge was characterized as "slandorous and completely unfounded" and made in an effort to hide the real reason for "low morale of United States troops in Korea." C. L. Hsia, representing Nationalist China, backed up Mr. Anslinger's charge of huge opium production in Red China, pointing out that he had attempted to lay similar information before the United Nations in 1950 and 1951.

THE FRENCH NATIONAL POLITICAL SCIENCE INSTITUTE in Paris this week heard Mr. John Foster Dulles, American Far Eastern expert, suggest that the western powers publicly warn Russia and Red China that any armed aggression will bring full and immediate retaliation, at times and places of the west's own choosing. He asked if it would not be better to sound the warning "openly and unashamedly" within the framework of the United Nations charter. He indicated that it was time the Communists knew that if they sent their armies into Indo-China, for example, the western powers would not be content merely to meet their armed forces at the point of aggression, but might employ "retaliatory action of our own fashioning."

General Mark W. Clark, USA, who will succeed General Ridgway in command of United Nations Forces in the Far East, arrived in Tokyo by air this week. He will have only a few days with General Ridgway in Japan and Korea before the latter leaves next Monday for the United States, to confer briefly with Washington authorities, after which he will fly to Paris to succeed General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower, USA, as Supreme Allied Commander in Europe.

SERVICE NEWS AND GOSSIP

Precedence Problem—Action was taken this week on the precedence of major generals of the Army and Air Force in comparison with rear admirals upper half of the Navy, a problem discussed in the 5 April issue of THE JOURNAL.

During recent years, the Army and Air Force have been somewhat disturbed because of the fact that, generally speaking, rear admirals upper half of the Navy outranked major generals of the Army and Air Force. This occurred because promotion in the Navy from rear admiral lower half (brigadier general) to rear admiral upper half (major general) is automatic, whereas in the other Services this promotion is by selection. Consequently, a Navy rear admiral upper half holds date of rank from the time he was made a rear admiral lower half. What this has meant is that Army and Air Force major generals have always been outranked.

This week, however, the complicated issue was resolved. The Army and Air Force, under authority of the Officer Personnel Act, changed the dates of rank of scores of major generals, as is indicated in the official orders beginning on the opposite page of today's JOURNAL. It is understood that henceforth the junior major generals of the Army and Air Force will be given a date of rank just behind that of the junior rear admiral upper half.

THE JOURNAL had forecast on 5 April, in an article analyzing various disparities in officer ranks and promotion policies among the Services, that no single omnibus action would be taken on the approximate four-score areas of difference in application of the Officer Personnel Act. It was predicted that individual actions were contemplated.

The changes in dates of rank of the major generals was one step in this direction.

However, as regards the Marine Corps major generals, Pentagon observers maintained the effect of the readjustment of Army and Air Force major generals currently serving in that grade would be to advance greatly many of them in joint Service seniority in relation to about the upper third of the Marine Corps major generals, and to advance all of them over about the lower third. The continuing effect of the plan would be such that major generals subsequently promoted in the Army and Air Force would immediately become senior to officers presently serving in that grade in the Marine Corps, since the date of rank of the most junior rear admiral of the upper half is senior to that of several of the most junior of the Marine Corps major generals. This condition would continue for some years to come.

General Officer Shifts—It can be expected that a number of Army general officers will receive assignment changes coincident with the arrival of General Mark W. Clark in Tokyo and the forthcoming arrival in Europe of General Matthew B. Ridgway.

Already one change may be linked to the shift. Maj. Gen. Joseph P. Sullivan, USA, who has been Quartermaster in the Office of the Chief, Army Field Forces at Ft. Monroe, Va., headed by General Clark, has received orders to the Far East Command. During World War II, General Sullivan was Fifth Army Quartermaster, where he also served under General Clark and during General Clark's service as Sixth Army Commander, General Sullivan was on his staff again.

Meantime, Lt. Col. Donald V. Bennett was detached from duty at Ft. Monroe, Va., to go to Tokyo as General Clark's aide.

"Stay-Down" Action—Many Air Force commanders and thousands of rated officers, Regulars and Reserves alike, are reported concerned over apparent Air Force vacillation in treatment of the handful of officers who have refused to fly after assignment to combat crew training.

It is known that General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, USAF Chief of Staff, had instructed his commanders to exert vigorous leadership in handling the "stay-down" cases although he directed also that courts-martial be used only in extreme cases. Therefore, commanders in the field reportedly were upset when the Secretary of the Air Force set aside, with considerable speed, decisions that had been reached in the field.

Significant in this regard is the statement made by General Vandenberg at headquarters of the Crew Training Air Force, Randolph AFB, Tex., last month:

"There is one idea I would like to knock in the head," the AF Chief of Staff declared. "That is the notion that the U. S. Air Force has in any way proposed to adopt a 'soft attitude' on this question of refusal to fly. The Air Force is a fighting organization. It is based on a skill that demands stamina, spirit, self-discipline and the highest sense of duty. There is no room in the Air Force now—there never has been—for malingerers, opportunists or shirkers—and least of all for men who having been trained at government expense in a difficult and essential art refuse to fulfill their duty."

General Vandenberg said he was mindful of the difficulties that some of the cases present, but stressed that "individuals involved will be treated fairly." The Chief of Staff concluded by saying that "from my study of the situation here I am convinced that General Lacey is handling the cases in this spirit."

It may prove, some airmen believe, that military discipline was undercut by the action taken at USAF Headquarters. These airmen feel that morale could suffer as a result of the Secretary's decision to adopt a relatively "soft attitude" in reviewing action taken in the field.

That the "stay-down" cases have not spread beyond the 14 reported cases is, as General Vandenberg has stated, a tribute to the "good name of the 62,000 rated officers who continue to uphold their trust and who stand ready to fly anywhere in the world that the national interest requires."

General Vandenberg Ill—General Hoyt S. Vandenberg is undergoing treatment at Doctor's Hospital in Washington, D. C., following a major operation for an undisclosed abdominal disorder.

The Air Force Chief of Staff was taken ill at his office on 6 May, and admitted for exploratory abdominal surgery. No diagnosis of his illness was made known, but the hospital announced that he was resting comfortably following the operation and that he would be hospitalized for at least two weeks.

In General Vandenberg's absence, General Nathan B. Twining, USAF Vice Chief of Staff, is acting as Air Force Chief of Staff.

Col. Wunderlich Retires—Col. Frederick R. Wunderlich, DC, whose last assignment was as Post Dental Surgeon at Fort Ord, Calif., has retired from the Army Medical Service, Maj. Gen. George E. Armstrong, MC, Army Surgeon General, announced this week. Colonel Wunderlich reached the statutory age limit after 36 years of active duty in the Army Dental Corps.

...The modern soldier prefers MILK to COFFEE, an Army QMC survey discloses. Milk has a dislike rating of only 1.1%, hot coffee 8.6 and iced coffee 50.9. The hot-cold dislike is reversed for TEA, where hot tea has a 25.9% dislike rating, iced tea only 14.7.

Foot Soldier's Role—A long-standing fear of many Army members that the role of the foot soldier was being subordinated in current debates over allocation of defense funds was alleviated partially this week by Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, jr. In an address delivered on 8 May before the National Wool Manufacturers Association in New York City, Mr. Pace described the impact of the Atomic Age on the Army.

He told how modifications are being made in Army procurement, organization and training to meet atomic requirements. Repeatedly, Secretary Pace stressed that "ground forces are still indispensable to success in an era of guided missiles, inter-continental bombers and atomic bombs."

Concluding his address, Secretary Pace said: "I can assure you that the Army is prepared to play its part, and effectively, in an atomic age and that the day when the role of the foot soldier is neglected in our defense will be a tragic one for the Free World."

In many Army quarters, concern has been growing that in the face of reduced defense funds, overemphasis is given to controversies between the Air Force and Navy and that, relatively, not enough support for the ground soldier's role has been voiced.

Camp Gordon Archers—If they ever run out of ammunition at Camp Gordon, Ga., there will be no cause for special alarm, for the installation has reliable fire power in reserve. This auxiliary force is the Tobacco Road Bow Hunters, reportedly the first archery club established on a military reservation. One member, Sgt. Robert Hosketter, has twice been Missouri State Field Archery champion.

Cost Consciousness—Some official recognition of what the Services are doing toward the conservation of funds is now being given by the House Committee on Armed Services. It will be recalled that some time ago the committee set up what some of its members dubbed the "Chamber of Horrors." This was an exhibit of light bulbs, T-squares, and sundry other items labeled to show how the various arms and services were paying widely different prices for the same items. Subsequent revelations showed rather conclusively that many of the inferences in the "Chamber of Horrors" were erroneous. For example, in the matter of light bulbs it was shown that the bulbs bought at widely different prices were really quite different bulbs although they did look alike. Now, however, the committee has taken down that exhibit and put up in its place a display of material gathered by the Chief of Information of the Army as part of a report on cost consciousness compiled by him for the Secretary of the Army. The exhibits with the report comprised a display of posters, photographs and newspaper clippings covering the field activities of the Army's "Cost Consciousness" program. When members of Congress learned of this report and exhibit they asked that it be sent to the committee to be put on display so that other Congressman might see what is being done to save money.

The newspaper clippings on display there include articles which describe actual savings effected, (for the period beginning 13 June, 1951) of $729,888,166. Of this amount $11,213,697 represents savings by local commanders, by their own initiative and through their independent action. A total of $718,888,166 has been saved in the same period by action instituted by Department of the Army agencies, and directed down through channels. This estimate is admittedly incomplete, since all economies effected in the various Army installations do not become news stories, and all news articles are not reported to the Chief of Information.

AIR FORCE

Secretary of the Air Force Thomas K. Finletter protested that the limitation of fiscal '53 spending would extend from 1 July 1954 to the first half of 1957 the day of readiness of the 143 wing force.

"In my opinion," said Mr. Finletter, "this would be a major blow to our air power. It would increase the chances of war and it would make this country vulnerable in the event war should come."

He emphasized that the whole structure of the 143 wing force "is calculated with respect to Russian capabilities as of 1 July 1954."

Mr. Finletter gave this budget summary of reductions in Air Force funds. Of the $55 billion originally sought by the Department of Defense, the Air Force was to receive $21.4 billion, and when the decision was made to ask Congress for only $52.4 billion, the Air Force was to be granted $20.7 billion. The House then cut the Air Force to $19.2 billion and imposed the limitation on spending, which will limit the Air Force to $17.4 billion.

"This," said Secretary Finletter, "throws all the planning out of kilter, creates a force not strong enough for the job for which it was intended, and weakens the security of the United States seriously between now and 1957."

The limitation will mean the loss of about 3000 planes between 1 Jan. 1953 and 30 June 1954, Secretary Finletter stated.

Would Cut Personnel

Secretary Finletter added that the military strength of the Air Force would be cut from a planned figure of 1,061,000 to 964,200. "This cut is particularly serious in view of the fact that in the build up from the 95 wing force to the 143 wing force the Air Force had programmed a 50 per cent increase in its striking power against an over-all increase of only about 13 per cent in military personnel," the Air Force Secretary told the Senate committee.

He said that 1,000,000 flying hours will be lost and that the standard of training of combat crews would be affected adversely.

"Section 638 and the accompanying House reductions," concluded Mr. Finletter, "in effect destroy the planned effectiveness of the Air Force."

Gen. Vandenberg's Statement

A statement by General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Air Force Chief of Staff, was read to the Committee on 7 May by General Nathan F. Twining, USAF Vice Chief of Staff.

Here are excerpts from General Vandenberg's remarks:

"Even in the face of the Soviet Union's enormous accretion of air strength, I am not ready to concede that control of the air has yet passed to our potential adversary. Our long-range bomber force, combined with our national advantage in atomic weapons, still tilts the balance of military power in our favor. But even here the margin of advantage is being steadily whittled down. And I will make the prediction that unless the crippling effects of the House actions are undone, this narrowing margin will shrink to nothing in another two years, and control of the air, with all that it implies, will then be within the grasp of the Soviet Union . . .

"The Air Force last Fall presented to the Joint Chiefs of Staff its request for a force of 138 first-line combat wings to be ready by mid-1954. The Air Force considered this strength to be highly desirable in view of the realities of the world air situation. However, in light of other compelling considerations, primarily of an economic nature, it became necessary during the discussions of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to scale down the force level from that which was considered desirable to that which was considered minimal.

"Subsequently, as a result of budget decisions within the Executive Branch, the date for the full attainment of this 126 combat wing force was pushed back from mid-1954 to the end of 1955. This action became known as 'the stretch-out,' but inasmuch as it left the Air Force with fewer first-line combat wings in mid-1954 than were deemed a necessary minimum, it represented a whittling down of the force required as of the critical date.

"Now as Secretary Finletter has already told you, the House actions, if sustained by the Senate, would extend this double process of stretching out and cutting back to a point where, taking into account the rapid obsolescence of modern military equipment, we may never actually achieve a combat-ready Air Force equal to the tasks assigned to it.

"In other words, the long-range effect of the House actions could postpone indefinitely the creation of an adequate combat-ready Air Force. But in the nearer view, the immediate effect of the Smith-Coudert amendment would be to knock out of the Air Force program, between 1 Jan. 1953 and 30 June 1954, approximately 3,000 modern aircraft which we desperately need. The cumulative effect of the loss of these 3,000 aircraft would come precisely at the date when according to all reasonable estimates this nation will arrive at a point of grave danger . . ."

Who Will Control The Air?

"What is involved here is not merely a question of dollars and cents. The fundamental question is 'Who will control the air in 1954 and thereafter?' That the cost of controlling the air is high we have discovered to our dismay. But what we apparently are forgetting is the bitter lesson learned by Germany and Japan in the last war—and that is the immeasurably greater cost of losing control of the air. Certainly the Soviet Union, as I shall develop in more detail in your hearings next week, has taken that lesson to heart.

"Now I do not argue that air power by itself is necessarily decisive, although I could make a good case for that belief. But this much I hold to be self-evident: Whoever controls the air will control the course of strategy. Without control of the air, the power to move decisive forces on the surface of land and sea will be critically if not fatally impaired. Without control of the air, the power to mobilize the ultimate resources of military strength—to organize industry for full war production, and to assemble and train manpower for the armed forces—could conceivably be lost, or at least terribly damaged in the first few weeks of war.

"The importance of being able to control the air cannot be exaggerated. Airmen have hammered incessantly upon this theme. They have been echoed by distinguished laymen who have been awakened to the military lessons of our time. Practically everybody seems to be for more air power. But over the past five years while the nation has dozed over its former pre-eminent position has been steadily undermined by the rapid development of Soviet air power.

"Time is running against us. Only two years remain before what may prove to be the most critical date in our history. What is called for is not a stretching out and a whittling down, but a gathering and building up of strength, proceeding with resolution and energy."

NAVY

Secretary of the Navy Dan Kimball testified that the expenditures limitation would affect work in progress on six submarines and eight minicraft under construction and seven aircraft carriers, 20 submarines, 26 amphibious and minicraft and 12 destroyers undergoing conversion.

Turning to aircraft, he said that about $600,000,000 of planes and parts deliveries would have to be slowed down "beyond the period in which they are required to meet Naval aviation readiness dates."

According to Mr. Kimball, "this slow-down may delay more than 500 aircraft and cause a further deficiency beyond the 700 which had been anticipated as of December 1954. Such a stretching-out of dollars at a time when the Navy is being vigorously urged to expedite delivery schedules," he commented, "would completely nullify the plans now agreed upon by industry for the modern aircraft so sorely needed for the defense of the Nation."

Vice Chief Testifies

Testifying in behalf of Admiral William M. Fechteler, USN, Chief of Naval Operations who was in Europe, Admiral D. B. Duncan, USN, Vice CNO, said that a tentative allocation by the Secretary of Defense, on the basis of the expenditures ceiling, would reduce Navy spending by $2,200,000,000 or about 16 per cent.

Admiral Duncan said that in addition to about 500 first line aircraft as many as 80 ships of various types would be delayed.

"Without equipment for modernizing the fleet and new equipment due for delivery in 1953," he warned, "the degree of combat readiness which can be attained will fall short of what will be vitally needed to discharge Naval responsibilities in an emergency."

Admiral Duncan gave the following examples of what this lower degree of combat readiness would mean:

"It would mean that many of our destroyers will have to undertake the protection of troop and freight convoys moving overseas without either the more modern devices for detecting enemy submarines or the best weapons for insuring destruction of those which are discovered. While our program of Guppy-Snorkel conversions of World War II submarines is nearing completion, those now under conversion, as well as those under construction, would be delayed. There would be further delay in providing additional radar picket vessels, a vital element in providing early warning to our task forces.

"Fleet marines would have to be carried to assault areas in World War II landing ships and put ashore in World War II tracked landing vehicles instead of improved types now on order. They would have to fight with obsolescent M-4 and M-26 tanks instead of the newer models. Their close support air squadrons would be incompletely equipped with first line attack aircraft.

"In the fast carrier task forces, not all of the carriers would be converted to operate modern aircraft nor would there be enough modern aircraft for the current 16 active air groups. These task forces would not pack the offensive punch they could and should. To defend themselves against enemy air attack, they would not have enough high speed jet aircraft for fully effective combat air patrols. The destroyers, cruisers, battleships and carriers themselves would have to depend on World War II anti-aircraft guns instead of the new 3-inch, 50 caliber gun and fire control equipment now being built especially for this purpose.

"The delay in receiving modern equipment and the delay in modernization of our ships and aircraft would weaken our operating forces far beyond what would be effected by reductions made in an orderly manner, if it is found that such have to be made. The risk involved is, in my opinion, imprudent."

MARINE CORPS

General Lemuel C. Shepherd, Commandant of the Marine Corps, said the expenditure limitation would cut Marine Corps spending by 22 per cent. The Marine Corps planned to spend $1,776,024,000 during fiscal year '53, he said, but would lose $382,024,000 if the ceiling on spending is adopted.

"The Marine Corps has always operated with the greatest austerity," said General Shepherd. "We have asked for the minimum sums necessary to meet our obligations—no more. With the funds requested we can maintain the degree of combat readiness which you have come to expect of us. We can support our forces and maintain a reasonable flow of materials from private industry.

"Without these funds," concluded General Shepherd, "our readiness cannot help but suffer; our material deliveries will be disorganized and the effect upon private industry will be harmful in a serious degree."

General Shepherd spelled out the specific effect of the Smith-Coudert amendment on the Marine Corps as follows:

"In accordance with the House report, military personnel strengths are not to be reduced. Those costs, for the Marine Corps, are a fixed charge and would require expenditure of $647,660,000 in the fiscal year 1953. This would leave an available balance of funds to be expended, under the limitation, of only $746,340,000. That sum must cover obligations, incurred from 1951 and 1952 funds, of $774,023,000, which would leave a deficiency of $27,683,000 in unliquidated obligations for fiscal years 1951 and 1952. In addition, it would prevent any expenditures from fiscal year 1953 funds."

Adm. DeLany Nominated

Rear Adm. Walter S. DeLany, USN, was nominated this week by President Truman to have the rank of Vice Admiral while serving as Commander of the Eastern Sea Frontier, and Commander of the Atlantic Reserve Fleet.

Admiral DeLany, who is now Commandant of the Third Naval District, New York City, will succeed Vice Adm. Oscar C. Badger, who will reach the statutory retirement age on 26 June. Admiral Badger has served in the assignment since May 1950.

Cataloging Agency Chief

Col. David W. Heiman, USA, who has been serving as Chief, Engineer Supply Control Office, Office of the Chief of Engineers, St. Louis, Missouri, has been appointed Director of the Munitions Board Cataloging Agency.

Colonel Heiman relieves Rear Adm. J. W. Fowler, USN, who has held the cataloging post in addition to his assignment as Director, Supply Management Agencies.

ness. Fourteen nations are working toward this goal. At Lisbon, these nations pledged themselves to carry out the first big step—the 1952 step—in this build-up of our military forces.

"It does not take more than common sense in the Kremlin to know that if this succeeds—or even partly succeeds—the chance of anyone overrunning Europe begins to decrease. And when our collective defense is assured—they may not want to risk war with the West. If they have the intention of going to war—and they have stated that war with the free nations is inevitable in their theory—then they would logically do everything in their power to slow down our readiness, and might decide to strike before we are strong.

"This present expenditure limitation, and the cuts in our own budget, and in the Mutual Security appropriations slow down our readiness.

"The other factor—when they should strike to do us maximum damage—brings up this question: Does the steady increase of strength from our own defense efforts, then, tend to invite an early attack by the Soviets? The answer is probably "yes". But it is better to accept this risk of attack to obtain a real increase in allied strength. Otherwise, we are in danger of offering them Western Europe, and ultimately the United States, on a platter.

3. The Status of Soviet Union Military Equipment

"This may seem a minor point. But it is an established fact that military equipment begins to deteriorate when it is six to ten years old.

"The Soviet Union ended World War II but did not demobilize her forces. Actually, she maintained an inordinately high war production—about 65% of her national production—for two years after the war, 1946 and 1947. Then she cut back, but continued to devote 15 to 20 percent of her national production to war materials.

"Adding an average of eight years to this, you have the years of 1954, 1955. In other words, if a sizeable portion of the war materials that she produced in 1946 to 1947 are to be used in battle, rather than scrapped—and remember she has a great deal of money and material tied up in this—then she will have to use them in 1954 and 1955.

4. Russia's Industrial Capacity

"Apart from our superior atomic capabilities, here is perhaps one of the reasons why Soviet Russia has not attacked before this. It is the effort she has had to make to rebuild her industries, and relocate a sizeable part of them in the less vulnerable area, behind the Urals. This rebuilding and increasing of her industrial capacity has been going on for years now. There are indications that she is reaching the point where she can meet some of the great pressures on her for trade commodities, which in turn will satisfy her needs for strategic materials to increase her armaments production.

"Obviously, a satisfactory strategic stockpile is one condition a nation must reach before she can risk a sustained conflict. Every indication shows that she is reaching that stage, both from a basis of industrial capacity and industrial location.

"Therefore, in 1953 and 1954, much of this self-deterrent that has held her back will be removed, and will no longer be a factor in our favor.

5. Modernization of Soviet Union and Satellite Forces

"From time to time, the Department of Defense has presented to your committees in Congress an intelligence summary of the strength of the Soviet Union and her satellites. You have perhaps noticed that the number of aircraft has remained practically the same for a period of two or three years. Some may have deduced that this was an indication of no intention to make war, and no improved capability of making war.

"Actually, there have been great improvements in the readiness of the Soviet forces. For one thing, the fact that they have maintained approximately the same figures in air and ground strength for that many years is a readiness factor. Supposing that we had kept just 50 divisions active and in training constantly since 1946, instead of this up-and-down demobilization, re-mobilization, and demobilization? Constancy of effort is an indication of improved readiness in itself.

"But in addition to that, our best intelligence indicates that the Soviet Union has been improving her armed forces as fast as she could. They have improved their mobility and their firepower by more modern equipment.

"In the air arm, for one outstanding example, the Soviet Union has continuously been producing jet aircraft to replace World War II models. While we have been using up our World War II aircraft out of storage to meet our needs—and to meet some of our Korean war needs—the Soviet Union has been producing jet aircraft fast enough to meet the Chinese Communist needs, and at the same time to expand rapidly the jet components of the Soviet Air Force.

Gen. Bradley's Conclusion

"I hate to pin a relative program down to any one period of zenith danger. In fact, today's estimates give the Soviet Union a capability which she may well consider as adequate to warrant the risk of a major aggression now. Nevertheless, the Soviet-Satellite capability is on a rising curve. As far as we can learn, Russia's modernization of her own and satellite forces, and the continued training within those forces that has built up her magnificent trained reserve, will reach a high point of veteran experience and knowledge, and a good point of material and equipment supply, in the area of time centered around 1954. After that, if sufficient means are provided, our relative capability will get closer and closer to that of the Soviets, and eventually minimize the risk of war—at least will eventually minimize the temptation for the Soviet Union to go to war.

"Due to the lead-time required in preparedness, the actions we take here today can bring results in time to meet that threat. In my opinion, the sooner we meet that threat with some specific military power and capability, the better off we will be.

"Our warning against the expenditure limitation and the budget ceiling is a matter of record. Any further major cuts, and certainly any further delimitation of expenditures for Fiscal Year 1953 could be militarily disastrous.

"In the realm of national security, there is one precious commodity on sale today, especially for the United States because we have the price to buy it: 'time.' Next year and in succeeding years the price will be higher and there will be less 'time' we can purchase. If we are allowed any time for preparedness after the next two or three years, I think we will be lucky. If we make proper use of the time that is allowed us to strengthen our forces, we can build a deterrent that the Soviet Union may respect, and we may avoid having a war at all. As an American citizen I believe it is very foolish for us not to make the best use of the time we have."

gining of World War II. The land was formerly the Santa Margarita Ranch which was associated with early California history. A subordinate unit of Camp Pendleton, the Training and Replacement Command, also under a general officer, has the mission of providing intensive advanced training to combat replacement personnel. That no phase of pre-Korea training may be overlooked, the Cold Weather Training Battalion was established, as an adjunct of the Training and Replacement Command, at Pickel Meadows, high in the mountains of northern California. Here Marines are trained and acclimatized for cold weather operations. Also at Camp Pendleton are a number of medical and dental installations and units including the U. S. Naval Hospital, a Medical Field Training Battalion, and a large Dental Clinic.

c. Marine Corps Depot of Supplies, San Francisco, Calif. This major supply activity plays an essential part in providing supplies to Marine activities on the West Coast and in the Pacific area. Stockpiling and transshipment of essential materials is the primary function of the Depot. Storage and repair functions are performed at the Central Depot Area and at Islais Creek Area, San Francisco. The Depot of Supplies also maintains large storage and repair facilities at its Barstow Annex, located in the Southern California desert where extremely dry atmospheric conditions are favorable to storage of all types of weapons and equipment. Under the immediate command of a general officer, the Depot of Supplies operates under control of the Quartermaster General of the Marine Corps.

2. Security Forces within the Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth and Seventeenth Naval Districts. These security forces consist of Marine Barracks and Marine Detachments at twenty-two naval stations. These barracks and detachments vary in size from about 50 to 350 officers and men. They are under the military command of the respective naval station commanders. The Commanding General, Department of the Pacific, exercises administrative control.

(3) Ships' Detachments. These detachments of Marines constitute part of the crews of naval vessels throughout the Pacific Ocean areas, and their relationship to Headquarters, Department of the Pacific is limited to administrative control in certain matters by the latter command.

In summation, the Department of the Pacific, while exercising elements of military command in some cases, is primarily administrative in nature. As the West Coast representative and coordinating authority for the Commandant of the Marine Corps, the Commanding General, Department of the Pacific, provides centralized administrative control by which West Coast, Alaskan and seagoing Marine units are enabled to perform their assigned missions.

explosion was observed in the target area. Buildings, factories and troop positions were taken under fire by the U. S. Destroyers Maddox, Owens, and Laffey. The U. S. Cruiser Juneau hammered enemy gun positions, bunkers, and supply areas. Buildings and troops were hit by the cruiser in harassing night bombardments.

On the west coast the British Patrol Frigates Whitesand Bay, Crane, and Morecambe Bay hit enemy troop and gun positions. The Australian Destroyer Bataan and the British Destroyer Constant hit bunkers and troop assembly areas, with spotters reporting several secondary explosions and heavy destruction.

At least 400 of the enemy were killed in a single day by Navy airmen from the U. S. Heavy Carriers Valley Forge and Princeton off the east coast. Secondary explosions and raging fires accounted for many Red casualties, as pilots of Corsairs, Skyraiders and Panthers loosed rockets, bombs, and napalm on supply and storage areas.

The sea flyers engaged in the methodical destruction of rail and highway bridges, trucks, rail cars, and trackage. Thousands of yards of recently repaired main line tracks were again destroyed.

Marine pilots from the U. S. Carrier Bataan off the west coast concentrated their attacks on camouflaged supply centers, knocking out numerous shelters housing troops and equipment. They also destroyed rail cars and boats along the west coast.

FEAF Planes Active

In addition to the big raid on the Suwon supply base devastating air strikes were made almost every day this week by bombers, fighter-bombers, and fighters of the Far East Air Force and attached Marine and Allied aircraft. Saturation attacks were made by Allied land-based planes on some of the most important main lines of the Reds, disrupting rail traffic and seriously crippling the Communist supply system.

In air combat, American Sabre Jets last weekend shot down nine enemy MIGs and in addition destroyed a Yak-3 and an M-2. One enemy LA-11 was damaged by the Sabres and a MIG was probably destroyed by Australian Meteors. The first air battle of last weekend occurred late last Saturday afternoon, 3 May, when 19 F-86 Sabre Jets, flying protective cover for a formation of Allied fighter-bombers, encountered three MIGs north of the Chongchon River and shot down all three. In the second clash, which occurred just before dusk the same evening, 25 Sabres attacked a formation of four MIGs and two LA-11s between Sinuiju and Suho reservoir areas. Two MIGs were destroyed and an LA-11 damaged.

High Altitude Fights

On the following day a flight of eight Sabres spotted a Yak-3 and an IL-2 flying at an altitude of about 2,000 feet just north of the Chongchon River. Both enemy planes were shot down before they could turn back toward Manchuria. Later in the day 21 Sabres pounced on a formation of four MIGs in the same area and damaged one of the enemy planes.

Still later 30 Sabres ran into a six-MIG formation in the Sinuiju and Suho reservoir areas. Duels were fought at altitudes of from 40,000 down to 5,000 feet. Four of the MIGs were destroyed. In another brief Sunday encounter just south of Pyongyang two MIGs, which had slipped through a Sabre Jet screen, attacked two Australian Meteor fighter-bombers. One of the MIGs was probably destroyed. On Monday in a short fight near Sakchu American Sabres damaged a MIG.

American F-80 Shooting Stars, F-84 Thunder Jets and F-51 Mustangs teamed to score multiple rail cuts along vital lines south of Huichon. Rails were wrecked in scores of places and gun positions were destroyed. An important highway was cut between Sinwon and Miryok-Tong, and rail cars and buildings were damaged. Republic of Korea Mustangs and Marine fighter-bombers ripped trackage between Sariwon and Sinwon and destroyed rail cars.

Flying in close support of Allied ground troops land-based Marine fighter-bombers blasted enemy battle line positions, inflicting numerous troop casualties in the Kumwha area, where they also destroyed troop bunkers and bridges, and silenced enemy guns. Australian Meteor twin jets blasted various supply buildings near Kyomipo.

Okinawa-based B-29 medium bombers in a night strike dropped 80 tons of electronic-aimed high explosives on the rail bridge complex at Huichon on the Kangye-Kunu route. Crews reported meager flak and no fighter opposition. Other Superforts flew close air support missions, dropping air-bursting bombs on enemy troops and supply concentrations near the front lines.

Night-flying B-26 light bombers and Marine planes destroyed enemy trucks on the Songchon-Wonsan road and on highways east of Pyongyang and near Chongju. Locomotives were damaged in the Sunchon-Sariwan and Junu-Sunchon areas.

Weekly Air Summary

The Far East Air Force announced in its weekly summary that during the seven-day period ending 2 May the Air Force and attached Marine and foreign aircraft flew 5,415 sorties, and shot down seven Red jets. They probably destroyed two more and damaged six others. During the week one American F-80 Shooting Star was lost in air combat, and seven other American planes were shot down by enemy ground fire.

During the period the planes of the Far East Air Force reported the destruction of 435 enemy supply vehicles. They also destroyed or damaged 55 rail cars, two locomotives, 155 enemy buildings, 90 gun positions, three forward supply dumps, and 150 bunkers, and cut railway tracks in 440 places. It was estimated that during the week they inflicted 230 casualties on the enemy.

Since the start of the war the Far East Air Force claims that 304 enemy MIG-15 jet planes were destroyed, 71 probably destroyed, and 495 damaged. Total enemy plane losses of all types of aircraft, including jets, to Allied land-based air-planes are reported to be 442 destroyed, 122 probably destroyed, and 555 damaged.

During the course of the war the Far East Air Force thus far has lost 51 jets and 16 propeller-driven planes in air combat, 170 jets and 253 propeller-driven planes to enemy ground fire, and 20 jets and 35 propeller-driven planes to other causes. Total plane losses in combat of the Far East Air Force were 545, of which 241 were jets. In addition 44 shore-based Marine planes attached to the Far East Air Force were lost to ground fire, and 10 to other causes, while four friendly foreign planes were lost in air combat, 43 to ground fire, and 11 to other causes.

During the war the Far East Air Force and attached units flew 449,625 sorties and destroyed 51,805 enemy vehicles, 9,015 rail cars, 730 bridges, 1,038 tanks, and 775 tunnels, and inflicted 169,630 casualties on the enemy. This summary does not cover damage inflicted or losses sustained by Allied carrier-based planes.

U. S. Coast Guard

PRESIDENT Truman this week asked Congress to vote a supplemental appropriation of $9,000,000 for the Coast Guard to cover costs for construction of additional floating equipment for the port security program.

"At the time the 1953 budget was prepared," said F. J. Lawton, Director of the Bureau of the Budget, "this program was under review and the requirements were not sufficiently known to permit inclusion in the budget document."

Legion of Merit Award

The Legion of Merit was awarded on 6 May to Comdr. Ralph McMurray West, USCG, who directed the rescue of 44 survivors of a collision at sea 14 May, 1951. The men were picked up after the USS Valcour and the SS Thomas Tracy collided five miles east of Cape Henry, Va.

Commander West, then in command of the Coast Guard Cutter Cherokee at Norfolk, Va., maneuvered through flaming oil and lashed his vessel to the burning Valcour, which carried large quantities of explosive gasoline, and held his dangerous position until the fire had been brought under control.

Promoted to commander last 6 Aug., he now is commanding officer of the cutter Chincoteague, stationed at Norfolk.

The presentation was made by Secretary of the Treasury, John W. Snyder.

Pilot Training

Sixty-five Naval Reserve aviators are being procured for active duty in the Coast Guard Reserve. These officers will be released by the Navy and commissioned in the Coast Guard Reserve with the same rank and date of rank held in the Naval Reserve. It is anticipated that all sixty-five will be on active duty about 1 June. Since many of these pilots have done little or no flying since 1946, air stations to which they will be assigned are faced with a heavy training task, the Coast Guard said. The 65 pilots will be initially deployed as follows:

Salem, Mass.	8
Brooklyn, N. Y.	8
Elizabeth City, N. C.	11
Miami, Fla.	4
St. Petersburg, Fla.	5
San Diego, Calif.	11
San Francisco, Calif.	8

Pay Increase

1951 retroactive date for the pay increase, the same date on which the 10 per cent cost-of-living pay increase was put into effect for civilian employees of the Government.

The House version of the service pay bill O. K'd the 10 per cent raise across the board and was estimated to cost $850,095,800 per year.

The Senate then passed a revised bill which added 3 per cent to base pay and varied amounts for allowances, depending on the number of dependents.

The estimated average increase in pay for persons on active duty in the Senate version of the bill was 5.75 per cent.

But, as THE JOURNAL pointed out immediately, retired personnel receive no allowances and consequently would have received only the 3 per cent increase.

The action of the conferees will raise to 4 per cent the pay increase for retired personnel, but it is seen immediately that this group has fared the worst in the Congressional action on the pay bill.

Compared to the House-approved bill which would have raised pay $850 million, the bill which won agreement of the conferees will increase military pay by an estimated $484,000,000.

Capitol Hill and Pentagon observers who have been most intimately connected with the military pay bill late this week were in agreement that speedy approval by the Senate and House is assured.

However, military personnel who have waited patiently for the long overdue cost-of-living pay increase are mindful of delays which attended this legislation.

As THE JOURNAL went to press, these typical examples of the effect of the conferees' proposal were worked out roughly by committee staff experts:

"The War in Korea"

One of the most important contributions to the military library in recent months is the latest volume in the Navy's Battle Report series, The War in Korea, published by Rinehart & Co.

It is a rare instance when history is recorded while it is still in the making, and what makes this book outstanding is that it chronicles the first six months of the Korean war at a time when that conflict is still undecided.

Prepared from official sources by one of the Navy's most skilled penmen, Capt. Walter Karig, assisted by Comdr. Malcolm W. Cagle and Lt. Comdr. Frank A. Manson, the 439-page volume is illustrated with over 200 photographs and eight full-page maps. It also contains Naval casualty lists and decorations.

Beginning with the events which led up to the outbreak, the volume carries the reader swiftly through the first half year of ground, sea and air action which culminated in the evacuation at Hungnam. It is told largely in the words of officers and men who stopped the enemy on the banks of the Nakdong River and from there carried the war to the northernmost perimeters of the hapless peninsula. Like its five predecessors in the Battle Report series, the book has been written in a popular, nontechnical style which will appeal as much to those who read for pleasure as to the historian.

Anecdotes, with which the book is filled, often are as stark in their realism and choice of language as those found in the fictionalized versions of war, such as Mailer's The Naked and the Dead, and James Joyce's From Here to Eternity. Events related in the volume are as heroic, as bizarre, as desperate and as gloriously in the tradition of the Navy and Marine Corps as any in the military history of the nation.

In addition to personal experiences and interviews with admirals and seamen, generals and privates of the United States' forces and those of their allies, the authors have had free access to the official records of the Department of Defense and the United Nations. Their finished product is an authentic history of the first modern international crusade against a common foe.

It will be enjoyed immensely by those who took part, or are taking part in the conflict, and those who have glimpsed the fight only from their morning papers.

German Peace Contract

The American decision is generally regarded as a wise one nevertheless. It has come after long pressure on the Defense Department by John J. McCloy, U. S. High Commissioner in Germany, who has felt that these extra privileges, despite tradition, are difficult to insist upon while the western powers are pressing for austerity on the part of the West Germans, and at the same time seeking to overcome the Germans' reluctance to do their full share in the defense of the west. The signing of the all-important contractual agreement is meeting with a great many difficulties; Mr. McCloy's aim has been to get rid of the minor objections with minimum delay.

The Army-Navy-Air Force Cotillion will end its season with a buffet supper-dance at Hop Hall, Fort Myer, on 17 May from 7 until 12. The now socially prominent Cotillion had its inception way back in 1946 in the minds of a few classmates of the West Point Class of 1924 at, of all places, a class picnic. The first Cotillion was held that same year, its success immediate, and it has been going great guns ever since—its fame so far flung that application for membership is world wide.

The Class of '24 has continued to sponsor this popular event each year and on this year's hard working and enthusiastic committee are: Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Ralph I. Glasgow, Chairman; Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Marcus B. Stokes; Col. and Mrs. John G. Hill, who have asked that Col. and Mrs. Peter C. Hains, Col. and Mrs. James P. Hulley, Mrs. John H. Claybrook, and Col. Samuel H. Fisher have the honor of receiving at this last dance after they retire from two years of earnest Committee participation.

Junior hostesses and hosts of the evening will be composed entirely of sons and daughters of the Class of '24, familiarly known as the scampering herd.

Hostesses: Margaret Mary Beurket, Kit Crosby, Jocelyn Hill, Mary Bruce Meade, and Gretchen Textor.

Hosts: Don Baughman, Bob Dewey, Dick Duval, Jere Maglin, John Hains, Judd King, Roy Kirkpatrick, and Mark Smith.

Applications for the buffet supper-dance must be returned not later than 12 May. Requests to join next year's Cotillion are to be sent in writing to Mrs. Cleland Sibley and will be accepted from 18 May until membership is filled. Acceptance is taken in order of applications.

Those eligible for membership are sons and daughters of active or retired officers of the Armed Services. Boys must be junior or senior high school students or in the first two years of college. Girls must be in their junior or senior year of high school. The above information should be contained in the written application. An early application will avoid later disappointment.

The traditional Armed Forces Day "open house" at the Soldiers, Sailors, Marines and Airmen's Club will be an event of next Saturday afternoon from one to three when members of the Woman's Army and Navy League will be hosts at a gala reception honoring individuals and groups that have presented gifts of beds and equipment to the SSM&A Club during the past year.

A brief dedication ceremony acknowledging those who have contributed beds and rooms will take place at 1:30, according to Mrs. Herman Feldman, chairman of the annual event. The Color Guard of the U. S. Coast Guard will participate in the celebration, and music will be furnished by the Marine Corps Band orchestra. Following the ceremony tea will be served in the library and in the Spring Carnival day for the Quartermaster Corps Wives Club was held last Friday at Ft. McNair. Gregory Hall and the territory immediately surrounding it was made into a Carnival midway, replete with barkers, shows, pony rides and the usual noise and fanfare attendant to such fun making enterprises.

The Carnival was planned and put into execution by Mrs. George A. Horkan, wife of the Quartermaster General of the Army and chairman of the Quartermaster Corps Wives Club. Children of the officers and personnel of the corps and their friends were seen riding the ponies, or fire engines, or airplanes under the supervision of Mrs. John J. Ryan and her committee. Mrs. John W. MacDonald, who had charge of contacting all the wives through the Quartermaster Hostess Groups throughout residential Washington and environs, was also there encouraging people to Pitch The Hoop and ring a prize.

Home baked delicacies were also popular for home sale in Mrs. Kurt L. Walitschek's booth.

A Carnival midway would not be complete with a show or two. Mrs. Robert Dennison, Mrs. William P. Winters, and Mrs. Charles P. Bellican, Quartermaster wives from Hawaii were there demonstrating the native hula. Bingo was held under the roof in Gregory Hall with Mrs. Carroll B. Henderson and her committee next to a display of prizes. The prizes had been collected by Mrs. W. F. Pheris and the 23 hostesses of the various Quartermaster groups.

A dining room was staffed by Quartermaster Teenagers resplendent in green and white dotted aprons and caps, serving under the supervision of Mrs. Thomas B. Whatley and her committee.

No Carnival could be complete without barkers, colorful posters, signs and other help from the men of the family. The Men's Auxiliary under the able sponsorship of Lt. Col. John M. Kenderdine, Lt. Col. Joseph S. Kujawski and Lt. Col. David R. Falke assisted.

■ WRIGHT-PATTERSON AFB, OHIO. Korean orphans will be warmer by 130,000 garments because a fighter pilot thought to tell of their plight, and because the Woman's Club picked it up from there. Inspiration for the clothing drive was a poignant letter from Capt. Joseph R. Clark, formerly based with the 97th Fighter Interceptor squadron at Wright-Patterson, to members of the Woman's Club.

Capt. Clark's eloquent letter left no alternative. The women of Wright-Patterson appointed a special committee, organized a campaign, set up 47 collection boxes at strategic places throughout the air base and sent out their plea to the 34,000 military and civilian personnel.

The drive started 17 March. Slightly more than four weeks later a huge trailer truck pulled out from the air base with its destination the Save the Children Federation Workroom in Knoxville, Tenn. The truck was filled with 104 boxes, each weighing about 300 pounds, packed sturdily for overseas shipment. ■ MITCHEL AFB, N. Y. The Distinguished Flying Cross was awarded here last week to Mrs. Barbara Pratt, wife of Capt. Charles W. Pratt, by Col. Louis M. Merrick. Mrs. Pratt and her two children, Charles Jr., 2, and Caroline, 3, live at 25 Crescent Road, Great Neck, N. Y.

Captain Pratt was reported missing while participating in aerial combat near the Sinanju Area in North Korea on 8 Nov. 1951. He earned the award by displaying extraordinarily aggressive heroism, according to the citation. He was flying number three position in a flight of four F-86's which were providing high cover for a returning RF-80 and its escort. A single enemy MIG-15 was seen heading toward their formation for a hit and run pass. After telling his lead element to remain as the top cover, Captain Pratt broke into the determined attack. The enemy aircraft broke away violently and disappeared toward Manchuria.

Captain Pratt then sighted twelve Communist MIG-15's heading north ten miles inland and slightly low. Outnumbered six to one, he immediately began an attack on the enemy formation, singling out the nearest ship in the rear. Under his attack, the MIG's made a counterattack on the Sabre Jets. The captain's wingman called for him to make a right turn away as two of the MIG's turned into firing position.

Captain Pratt made two or more 360-degree turns as his wingman scissored back and forth behind him in a vain attempt to drive the fighters off. As Capt. Pratt completed his last 360-degree turn, his wingman saw him roll level and dive toward the sea at a 45-degree angle. The wingman called his leader to break away again, but there was no response. Vapor streamed from the captain's portwing as his wingman maneuvered desperately to cover him. His wingman called him two more times before being forced to defend against another attack upon himself.

The new policy, in general, will leave career specialties, including flight training to Air Force schools. Special emphasis still will be placed, however, on preparations for flight training. Dependents Going to Alaska Find Travel Varied, Weather A Surprise

(Sixth in a Series)

In this article, THE JOURNAL seeks to outline for service wives what they can expect when they follow their husbands to duty assignments in Alaska.

Perhaps the most complete portfolio in the files of the Armed Forces Hostess Association is the one which has been compiled about this "Northern Frontier." Twenty-three pages of personal observations and helpful hints have been recorded by the wives of military personnel in Alaska. Excerpts from this report will tell you what to expect if you plan to follow your husband to an Alaskan assignment.

First, transportation. In this field, there is a wide choice—air, boat or automobile. However, those choosing to go by air must pay their own way. Scheduled flights from Seattle cost as little as $86.25 (aircoach) and as much as $120.75 (summer strato-cruiser rates). The trip takes about four and one-half hours by strato-cruiser and about seven and one-fourth hours by aircoach. Non-scheduled airlines are slightly less expensive.

Dependents traveling on military vessels will spend about four days aboard ship from Seattle to Whittier, and an additional period on the Alaskan Railroad. Wives traveling by boat—since they are entitled to hold baggage which will probably accompany them—are urged to include a skeleton supply of kitchenware and house-cleaning equipment. Household goods follow three to four months later.

Alaskan Highway

Although travel up the Alaskan Highway is unrestricted, travelers must be able to prove ownership of their car or, if the car is not theirs, must have with them written permission to drive the car up the Alcan. The driver should have personal identification, preferably a birth certificate, and sufficient funds to meet the high prices of gasoline, tires and repairs on the highway.

The entire route from Dawson Creek to Anchorage is open for travel all through the year. Although no heavy snowfall is encountered during the winter months, extreme cold may make travel uncomfortable from about the middle of November to the middle of March. Temperatures ranging from 60 to 70 degrees below zero are not uncommon in midwinter. When the trip is made during the seven-month period from the middle of September to May, your car should be winterized before leaving Edmonton. Few places along the highway have adequate facilities or equipment. A can of anti-freeze should be carried during these months.

The best travel time on the highway is from mid-May until mid-October. It is not considered advisable, however, for women to drive on the highway alone. If necessity demands this, the woman should join a caravan of cars. An 80-page booklet, "The Milepost," listing all highway connections with the Alaskan Highway and covering the entire route from the States to Alaska, can be obtained by writing to the Alaska Research Company, Box 2446, Anchorage. The $1.00 charge includes postage; 30c should be added if you want the booklet by airmail.

Climate

The most startling aspect of the climate is that the weather is not nearly as dreadful as many people generally believe. It is cold, but not unbearable. Winters are long, starting about October, when the temperature drops to the thirties and levels off—the ground freezing at night and thawing the next day. From November through January, temperatures are about 15 degrees above zero. The average low is about eight degrees above zero, but during January (the coldest month), there is usually an extreme cold spell when the drop may go to 43 degrees below. These extreme low temperatures don't last.

Spring and summer are short seasons, beginning about the latter part of May or the first part of June, with average temperature at about 55 degrees. The days are long—as much as 19 hours in June—and sunny days are relatively rare.

Housing

Little can be said here about military housing inasmuch as quarters vary at each station, and are assigned on a strict priority basis. However, if you anticipate renting a house off-base, you will like to know that rental prices on apartments and houses range from $85.00 a month, plus utilities, for the most primitive facilities, to $250.00 a month, plus utilities, for a two-bedroom modern house. Houses, generally, are small. One or two-room units are always available, but as a rule they are not recommended. Three-room houses and apartments are available, a two-bedroom house is harder to find, and three-bedroom homes are very limited.

Most houses do not have dining rooms and, due to the conservation of floor space, have shower units instead of tubs. The average home also lacks adequate laundry facilities, but most rental units provide electric refrigerators. Cooking facilities range from the most obsolete oil stove to the most modern electric stove.

Heating the home is of major importance. Fueloil and coal are available, but even the cheapest available fuel is expensive. The cost of heating a small, well-insulated two-bedroom house ranges from $10 a month during the summer to $60 a month during the winter. The electric bill for a house with the usual electrical appliances, plus an electric stove and water heater, averages about $30 a month.

Most trailer courts are highly unsatisfactory, and it is difficult to move a trailer over the Alaskan Highway. Facilities along the highway for trailers are not too good.

Furniture

Bear in mind that you will be living in Alaska for two years and will have need for the same standard household furnishings and equipment you would use at any station in the States. The amount of furniture to bring will depend largely upon the size of your quarters. It takes from two to four months for household goods to arrive from the States.

Gas stoves are of little use in Alaska due to the fact that natural gas is not available. If you are interested, however, your stove may be converted for use with bottle gas.

There is a very large turnover of furniture and household goods. Many people like to sell some, or all of their furniture and household goods before returning to the States. Thus, almost any household item can be purchased at a fairly reasonable price, but it will be second-hand merchandise. New furniture, in the downtown stores, is limited in supply, making selection poor and prices high.

An Auto is a Must

A car is a definite necessity in Alaska, whether one lives on the base or off, and it is advisable to put your automobile in the best possible condition prior to leaving the States. The car should have good tires and tubes, a good battery, and a good heater and defroster.

To assist in starting your car during the winter months, it is necessary to have one of the following: a head-bolt heater, a trickle charger, or an oil dip stick. A set of chains is also recommended. Anti-freeze is available in the Anchorage area.

Base service stations have adequate facilities to service and winterize your car, but only minor maintenance can be performed. Major overhaul and repair must be done in town, where prices are high.

Be sure to check your auto insurance to see that you have full coverage for an overseas station. Drivers' licenses are obtainable in Alaska as are Alaska auto tags which cost $10. You can expect to have your car outside all year, since there are practically no garages.

For additional information on commissary and post exchange facilities, clubs, hospitals, schools, and so forth, visit the Armed Forces Hostess Association, Room 1B877, The Pentagon, if you are in the Washington area. The Association will be happy to let you peruse its files at your leisure.

Jesse Powell Retires After 58 Years' Service

Jesses H. Powell, 78, Special Advisor to The Adjutant General of the Army, retired on 30 April after 58 years and four months of government service.

Only three civilian employees of Department of Army have retired with longer records of service—two were employed 60 years and one, 59 years.

Mr. Powell was first employed by the War Department 5 Feb. 1894, as a laborer in the Office of the Commissary General of Subsistence. Four years later he was transferred to the position of clerk in the Office of Records and Pensions, later designated the Military Secretary's Office, and now the Office of the Adjutant General. He has served under 16 Adjutant Generals, beginning with Brig. Gen. Samuel Breck and continuing to the present, Maj. Gen. William E. Bergin.

In November 1919 Mr. Powell attained the rank of Chief of Division in the Executive Office of The Adjutant General; in 1934 he became Deputy Administrative Assistant, and the following year, Administrative Assistant. He was awarded the Exceptional Service Emblem in 1945 and Superior Accomplishment Awards in 1946 and 1952.

His service extended through the Spanish-American War, the Philippine Insurrection, Punitive Expedition into Mexico, two World Wars and the Korean conflict.

A testimonial praising Mr. Powell as the "dean of the personnel of the office" has been presented to him by Maj. Gen. K. B. Bush, acting in the absence of The Adjutant General, who is on an official inspection trip. "Your outstanding services," the testimonial states, "have earned the recognition and appreciation of the entire Military Establishment, the Executive Branch of the Government and The Congress of the United States. During your long and distinguished career as a civil servant, extending well over half a century, the enviable record you have established is a history of personal loyalty, unremitting devotion to duty and able and honorable service to the Nation. It constitutes an example worthy of emulation by all military and civilian."

Mr. Powell lives in Washington, D. C., at 2238 Hall Place, N.W.

Gen. Potter Appointed

Brig. Gen. William E. Potter, USA, will become Deputy Commandant of the Industrial College of the Armed Forces, Fort Lesley J. McNair, Washington, D. C., upon completion next month of his present assignment as student at the National War College.

From 1949 to 1951, General Potter was Acting Assistant Chief of Engineers for Civil Works when, under Lt. Gen. Lewis A. Pick, Chief of Engineers, he administered the extensive river and harbor and flood control program assigned to the Corps of Engineers.

Let M1 Contract

The award of an Army Ordnance contract of $11,147,000 to Harrington and Richardson Arms Company, Worcester, Mass., for the manufacture of Garand 30 caliber M1 rifles and spare parts has been announced by Col. Douglas G. Ludlam, Commanding Officer, Boston Ordnance District.

Joseph H. Quick, president of Harrington and Richardson Arms Co. and senior partner of Work-Factor Co., said that plans call for subcontracting 65% of the order. Technical data to be used in preparing bids have been made available to 568 small manufacturers in the Worcester area through the cooperation of the Worcester Chamber of Commerce.

During World War II, Harrington and Richardson Arms Co. produced a number of weapons including the Harrington and Richardson Reising sub-machine gun, the Harrington and Richardson semi-automatic rifle, and various types of line-throwing guns, flare guns, shotguns and revolvers. For its excellence in production during the last world war, the company was officially cited five separate times by the Army and Navy.

Plan Defense Plant Visits

Ten major industrial centers in the United States were visited by the faculty and student body of the Industrial College of the Armed Forces from 5-9 May.

Each of 10 groups from the College visited a different area to observe activities of major significance in industrial mobilization. These field trips are scheduled annually as part of the school curriculum and have no connection with current procurement activities of the Armed Forces.

Through the cooperation of industrial concerns, visits will include discussions with officials concerning management problems of joint interest to industry and the armed forces and the observation of industrial facilities and plant operations. The industrial facilities visited are representative of a number of the key industries which play important roles in industrial mobilization.

Groups visited the following plants:
Birmingham Area: Pullman-Standard Car Manufacturing Co. and Continental Gin Co.; Beaunit Mills and Coosa River Newsprint Co.; American Cast Iron Pipe Co.; and Stockham Valves and Fittings Co.

Buffalo-Rochester Areas: Pillsbury Mills, Inc.; Bell Aircraft Corporation, Schoelkopf Station, Niagara Mohawk Power Corp.; Sylvan Electric Corp.; Eastman Kodak Co. (Rochester, N. Y.).

(New Haven, Conn.).

The Industrial College of the Armed Forces, of which Maj. Gen. A. W. Vannaman, USAF, is Commandant, has the mission of preparing selected officers of the armed forces for important command, staff, and planning assignments in the Department of Defense, and selected civilians for industrial mobilization assignments in government agencies.

The 1951-1952 Resident Class which is making these trips totals 128: 39 officers of the Army; 39 officers of the Navy, of which 6 are Marine Corps; 39 officers of the Air Force; and 11 civilian officials from the following Government agencies: Department of State, Department of Treasury, Department of Interior, Department of Labor, Department of Commerce, Department of Navy, and Department of Air Force.

Flameless Fuel Unit

A new method for heating Army canned rations in the field by wrapping a flameless fuel unit around the can is being developed for the Army Quartermaster Corps.

The experimental device operates on a principle similar to that of hot-patch in tire vulcanizing. One of the fuel units is wrapped around each can, ignited with a match, and in a few minutes heats the contents of the can to the proper temperature.

Initial testing indicates that the fuel unit is effective even though the contents of the can are frozen solidly. After refinements have been made in samples now under test, the unit will be given extensive field testing.

Wool Reserve Contracts

All contracts for the manufacture of fabrics and end-items under the 100,000,000 pound military wool reserve program authorized by Congress in Public Law 843, 81st Congress, will be awarded before 1 July.

The materials and garments produced under this program will constitute a reserve against future emergency requirements for the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps.

Funds for procuring raw wool, fabrics, and end-items under the program were assigned to the Army Quartermaster Corps which made actual procurements for the Army and Air Force and delegated to the Navy and Marine Corps responsibility for making procurements for those services. Under the reserve program, the wool was allocated on the following basis: Army, 42 per cent of the total; Navy 32 per cent, Air Force, 20 per cent; Marine Corps, 6 per cent.

Demonstrate New 'Copter

The new YH-21 helicopter, now in the course of its flight test program for the Air Materiel Command, was demonstrated in flight this week for a group of press and Service observers by the manufacturer, Piasecki Helicopter Corporation.

The new rotary-wing craft will be constructed in a number of variations to meet the varied needs of the Services. As a troop carrier it can be fitted out to carry 20 equipped troops. For use in the evacuation of wounded, it can be converted into a hospital ship with 12 litters and still leave ample room for medical personnel to attend to the patients in flight. As a cargo carrier it can carry 14,000 pounds. In addition it is fitted with a cargo lift, so that the pilot can hover over a spot and operate the lift to pick up 500 pounds and swing it into an opening on the right side. It is powered by a Wright Cyclone 9 engine giving it a forward speed of about 125 miles per hour and an operating range greater than any previous models.

At the same time the visitors were shown through the new Piasecki plant at Morton, Pa., where operations already have started in the new 220,000-square foot addition built next to the older 180,000-square foot factory.

Fuel Tanks For B-47

Normal combat range of the new Boeing B-47B Stratojet—the world's fastest bomber—has been increased considerably over earlier B-47's, Boeing Airplane Company revealed this week with Air Force approval.

Two external fuel tanks, the capacity of which was not announced, now may be used on all production B-47's.

The newest Stratojet, known as the B-47B, is in large scale production at the Wichita Division of Boeing. The 600-miles-per-hour bomber also is to be produced by Douglas Aircraft Co., Inc., at Tulsa, Okla., and by Lockheed Aircraft Corp. at Marietta, Ga.

The huge streamlined fuel tanks, largest ever mounted on an airplane, will be utilized on long-range missions. They are suspended one under each wing, between the tip and inboard jet engine pods. The fuel tanks are being built to Boeing specifications by Ryan Aeronautical Corporation of San Diego, Calif.

The increased fuel capacity, combined with greater efficiency of the new General Electric J-47-23 engines, gives the sleek Stratojets an even greater combat potential, Boeing officials said. The new jet engines each develop more than 5800 pounds of thrust. Earlier engines used on the B-47 were rated at 5200 pounds of thrust each.

As previously announced, production models of the Stratojet also have provisions for inflight refueling, using the Boeing-developed Flying Boom system.

Engineering Manager

A former Navy engineering officer, Ivan Speer, has been named engineering manager of the AiResearch Manufacturing Company of Arizona.

Speer joined AiResearch in 1946 after three years' active duty in a Navy combat aircraft service unit. A graduate of the University of Colorado, he had served as assistant project engineer on gas turbine engines in the AiResearch Manufacturing Company, Los Angeles, prior to his new appointment.

Banshee Contract "On Time"

On schedule, McDonnell Aircraft Corporation concluded on 30 April one of its seven current announced contracts with the Navy and Air Force as the final F2H-2 type twin-jet Banshee on order was delivered to Navy representatives at the McDonnell plant, Lambert-St. Louis Municipal Airport.

Production work on later versions of the twin-jet Banshee, the F2H-2P photo reconnaissance model and the newest, larger F2H-3 Banshee is continuing. In addition to these two contracts, McDonnell has an order for a single-jet Navy fighter, the swept-wing F3H-1 Demon; an Air Force order calling for production preparations for the manufacture of a long-range twin-jet fighter, and several experimental contracts from both the Air Force and the Navy which will maintain the firm's current backlog of more than $300,000,000.

First production deliveries of the F2H-2 Banshee began in August 1949. The total number produced cannot be revealed because of security requirements.

Lockheed Report

Substantially increased sales and profits are expected for Lockheed Aircraft Corporation in 1952, with the bulk of the gains materializing in the second half of the year, President Robert E. Gross reported 6 May at the annual meeting of shareholders. Directors of Lockheed, following the stockholders' session, declared a dividend of 30 cents per share of capital stock payable 13 June to shareholders of record 23 May.

Directors also elected D. J. Haughton, long-time Lockheed manufacturing executive, to become a vice president of the company's Georgia Division at Marietta, Ga., where B-47 bombers will be built. He has been serving as general manager there since January. James V. Carmichael, who has been vice president of the Georgia Division, was elected to the board of directors. All other directors were re-elected.
